PREFACE.

The documents calendared in this volume commence in March, 1702, at the accession of Queen Anne, and carry the story of her reign down to the end of May, 1703. Whilst the volume was in preparation, the Advisory Committee, which was recently appointed by the Master of the Rolls, in the course of its investigations considered the subject of the Calendar of State Papers, Domestic, for the reign of Queen Anne; and, as a result of their deliberations, I was requested to divide the documents into two classes, and to publish the first class in a Calendar in chronological order, as I had previously done in other Calendars; but to reserve the second class, summarise their contents in Tables, and place those Tables at the end of each year. The Deputy Keeper of the Records gave me directions as to which documents should be placed in the Calendar, and which should go into Tables; and I have to acknowledge his great kindness and valuable help in carrying out the change. It involved re-setting a number of pages which had been passed for press; but I am convinced that the new method of calendaring—which is, indeed, not new, but was adopted in the Calendar of Home Office papers of the reign of George III—is preferable to the old. It will make this volume more handy and useful to students than it would have been had the method of placing everything according to its date been followed.

The documents which have been, or will be, placed in the Calendar proper are to be found in the Public Record Office under the following names and numbers:—

110–115, 146–147, 204, 206–208, 209–219; S.P. Dom., Various, 1, 7, 13, 21. A few informal State letters have been entered in S.P. Dom., Entry Book 350, S.P. Scotland, Warrant Book 18, &c. and in S.P. Ireland, King’s Letter Book 3, &c. (which are mostly given up to formal documents), and these are also placed in the Calendar.

The documents or entries which are, or will be, placed in the Tables are to be found under the following names and numbers:—

The prefatory notes at the heads of the Tables will give the reader further information as to the contents of each Table. I must add, however, that at the outset of the Calendar a few of the entries, especially those from the Scottish and Irish books which, according to the above classification, should be placed in the Tables, have been given in extenso in the Calendar. This has been done, firstly, to show the reader what manner of documents of the period under review are compressed into the narrow limits of the Tables, and, secondly, in cases where a letter, which is really a document of State correspondence, has found its way into a book for the most part devoted to formal grants and warrants. Thus in S.P. Scotland, Warrant Book 18, in S.P. Ireland, Entry Book 3, and in S.P. Dom., Entry Book 350, there are to be found, as I have shewn above, here and there, interspersed among formalities, political letters of great interest. In such cases, my rule of division gives way, and the documents are placed in the body of the Calendar.

It will be seen that the Tables contain only entries from the Entry Books with the exception of the "Lists of Ships" Table. This is from S.P. Dom., Naval 111, which contains a number of minute reports sent by the Lord High Admiral’s Advisory Council to the Secretary of State weekly during part of the period of this volume. Until a short time ago, the Entry Books were set apart in classes according to the various matters with which they dealt; but lately all these Entry Books have been collected into one great series (of 448 volumes), and the student has now to dip into this series according to the subjects on which he desires information. For the Secretaries of States’ letters, he must go, as he will find from this Calendar, to Vols. 104, 105 &c., or to Vols. 204, 205 &c.; for the Caveats to Vols. 74, 75, and for Commissions in the Army to Vols. 168, 169 &c., and so on. The arrangement of dividing the Calendar into two parts—the Calendar proper, and the Tables—will be maintained in the future; and I have therefore thought it right to explain it at some length. Though I abandoned the chronological system with reluctance, I feel sure that the change was a good one. As the List of State Papers, Domestic, was under revision at the time of the preparation of this volume, my task of collecting everything that had to be collected would have been difficult had not two of the permanent officers, Mr. Lyle and Mr. Johnson, given me their help. I owe much to both of them.

Owing to various reasons, I have decided not to write an historical preface to this volume. In the first place, it deals with fifteen months of our history which are very well known. In the second, the volume is already bulky, and is swollen by a large Index of over 100 pages. Lastly, I think it better to defer such a preface until the second volume (already far advanced) is published: when opportunity will be given to review the course of events between the accession of Queen Anne and the battle of Blenheim. For a general table of contents of the volume, I refer readers to the Index under the heads “Nottingham” and “Hedges.” I need only say here that this volume, dealing as it does with public affairs and administration at the moment of the outbreak of a great war, cannot but be of deep interest to many readers at the present time. In March 1702, England was in a position not unlike that in which she suddenly found herself in 1914.
She was about to engage in a struggle against a powerful Continental State, and in the course of that struggle was drawn into combination with several other States on the Continent, each with different interests of their own, but all interested in the maintenance of what Queen Anne called "The Balance of Europe." There are, of course, many points of difference between the cause for which England went reluctantly to war in 1702 and the cause for which she drew her sword in 1914. These similarities and differences will, however, readily appear to the readers of this volume, and will no doubt be emphasised by them when they come to make public use of its contents. It is not the part of an Editor to deal with them. The historian sits in the stalls of the theatre whilst the drama of history is unfolded before him, and records his experiences and conclusions. The annalist may more justly be compared to the humble scene-shifter in the wings, who, in the intervals between his mechanical tasks, pauses now and then for a moment to look out from his corner upon the stage. His only advantage—if such it be—is that he sometimes sees the actors and actresses when the limelight is not upon them.

I have complied with the directions of the Master of the Rolls by noting unusual phrases, peculiarities of expression &c., where they occur.

[8 March. St. James'.] Coronation Oath taken by Queen Anne as Queen of Scotland.

"We faithfully promise and swear by this our solemn oath in presence of the Eternal God that during the whole course of our life we will serve the same Eternal God to the uttermost of our power, according as He has required in His most Holy word revealed and contained in the Old and New Testaments, and, according to the same word, shall maintain the true religion of Christ Jesus, the preaching of His Holy Word and the due and right ministration of the Sacraments now received and preached within the realm of Scotland, and shall abolish and gainstand all false religion contrary to the same; and shall rule the people committed to our charge according to the will and command of God revealed in his aforesaid word, and according to the lovable laws and constitutions received in this realm noways repugnant to the said word of the eternal God, and shall procure to the uttermost of our power to the whole Kirk of God, and whole Christian people, true and perfect peace in all time coming; That we shall preserve and keep inviolate the rights and rents with all just privileges of the Crown of Scotland, neither shall we transfer nor alienate the same; That we shall forbid and repress in all estates and degrees, reif, oppression and all kind of wrong; and we shall command and procure that justice and equity in all judgments be kepted to all persons without exception, as the Lord and father of all mercies shall be merciful to us. And we shall be careful to root out all hereticks and enemies to the true worship of God that shall be convict by the true Kirk of God of the aforesaid crimes out of our Lands and Empire of Scotland. And we faithfully affirm the things above written by our Solemn Oath."

P. 3, followed by

Declaration of Prince George of Denmark and certain Privy Councillors of Scotland.

We the undersigned, being summoned by the Queen to be present at the taking of the Coronation Oath, conform to the Wt. 3880.—H.T. Ltd.—400.

settlement of the Crown of Scotland, witness that her Majesty did in our presence take and sign the above oath.

Six lines: Signed at the Palace of St. James', 8 March, 1701-2, by Prince George of Denmark, the Dukes of Queensberry and Argyle, the Marquis of Lothian, the Earls of Seafield and Hindford, Secretaries of State, the Earls of Mar, Morton and Eglinton, and Viscount Teviot.

8 March. The Queen to the Privy Council of Scotland.

St. James'.

Announces the death of King William and her own accession. Proceeds:—We, having heard the claim of right and grievances, have taken and signed the Coronation Oath in presence of several of the Privy Council whom we called together for that end. We authorise you to continue to meet and act as our Privy Council, as you did in the reign of King William III, until you receive a new commission therefor under our hand. We also authorise and require you with the proper care and solemnity to publish our enclosed Proclamation ordering all our officers of state, councillors, magistrates &c. to continue in their offices until new commissions under our hand can be sent down to them. On this occasion we give you and all our people assurance of our firm resolution always to protect their religion, laws and liberties, and also "the establishment Government (sic) of the Church," and that we will do everything possible for their happiness and prosperity. In return for our protection we shall expect your loyal service, as you gave it to King William.

P. 3. Overwritten as foregoing and countersigned (copy) by Secretary Seafield. Ibid, pp. 93, 94. Enclosing:—

Proclamation of Queen Anne.

Announces King William's death. Authorises all Scottish officers, civil and military, to continue to act under their commissions from the late King till new commissions can be prepared and sent down to them.

P. 4. Ibid, p. 95.

Same. Royal Warrant for the Earl of Marchmont.

King William by his commission, authorised Patrick, Earl of Marchmont, to represent him in the present Assembly of the Church of Scotland. The Queen, anxious to favour the Assembly, and convinced of the sufficiency of the Earl of Marchmont, ordains a new commission to be passed under the Great Seal of Scotland continuing him in that place and authority under her Majesty. Full powers to be inserted in the grant. The Queen desires all ministers and elders of the said Assembly and Church, with all others her Majesty's good subjects, to obey the Earl of Marchmont as her High Commissioner. This commission to be in force during the ensuing session or till recalled and discharged. The commission to be extended in the most ample and best form, and to pass the Great Seal per saltum without passing any other seal or register. This shall warrant the directors of her Majesty’s Chancellery to draft the letter and the appender of the Seal to append it.

P. 1. Overwritten and countersigned as foregoing, with docquet at foot.

9 March. Manchester to the Mayor of Canterbury.

You and others [named] have done well in stopping Charles Trant, an Englishman, and also an alleged servant of the Venetian ambassador here from going to France. Liberate the servant, after taking his name, and send up Trant by the messenger who bears this, and has my warrant to receive him.

10 March. Same to Mr. Methuen.

Announces the King’s death. Steps are being taken to continue all things on the same footing as the King put them, and will no doubt succeed both at home and abroad. Proceeds:—Enclosed is the Queen’s letter of notification of the King’s death to the King of Portugal; and a copy is also sent. Deliver it as soon as it comes to your hands to the Secretary of State, to be presented to the King. We shall send new letters of credence and instructions by the next post, to the Groyne [Coruña], which leaves this day fortnight. In the meanwhile, act as formerly, and take care that the Consul at Lisbon does so likewise, that the merchants may suffer no inconvenience. You shall put yourself and servants into the strictest mourning, for which allowance will be made to you in your next bill of extraordinaries.

You see plainly by the Queen’s Declaration and the addresses of both Houses of Parliament that it is their resolution “to maintain the alliances made for abating the exorbitant power of France.” The King’s death will make no difference in this matter: of which you will make the ministers of that Court as sensible as you can.

Same. Same to the Mayor of Dover.

From whom did the Portuguese envoy’s servant who, you say, went over to France on Sunday morning, have his pass? Pray send me the pass if you can come at it. Observe my directions as to stopping all who wish to leave, and watching all who land from France or French Flanders.

P. ¾. S.P. Dom., Entry Book 101, p. 188.

Same. Vernon to Chief Justice Holt.

The Queen has ordered the Council to meet at 10 a.m. to-morrow at St. James’, when her Majesty would have your Lordship be present and prepared to give your opinion on the Bill of Rights and the last Act for enlarging the Succession, whether there be anything in those Acts that her Majesty is required to perform at her first coming to the House of Lords.

Also notes of the like letters to the Attorney-General and the Solicitor-General. Ibid.

10 March. Manchester to the Lords Justices of Ireland.

I have yours of the 4th and 6th and suppose that the petition enclosed therein of Col. Gustavus Hamilton should now be presented to the Queen. The other papers of Capt. Spraggs, Lord Mountjoy &c., which you mention are not come to hand. You will have letters from the Privy Council on the King's death.

10 March. Royal Warrant to Same.

By orders of 19 February last you were directed to cause our several regiments of foot in Ireland to be at once recruited to 12 companies of two sergeants, three corporals, two drummers and 50 private soldiers, the servants included in each company. Four regiments of foot from Ireland, to be appointed by Major-General Thomas Erle, are to be put on board the fleet for this summer's expedition. For the better and more speedy recruiting of those regiments you are to cause 40s. a man to be issued out of the revenue of Ireland to the respective colonels of the said four regiments for so many privates (the servants excluded) as by the said orders they are to raise for recruiting their regiments to the above-named strength. At their embarkation you shall cause them to be cleared all the arrears then due to them.

11 March. Manchester to the Mayor of Canterbury.

Plummer, Percivall and Brown, whom you have stopped on their way abroad, are to be set at liberty, and Plummer and Percival are to have back their letters. Permit them to return here, but not to go towards France. Detain Trant till a messenger arrives to take him, and continue to prevent persons going to France till further order.

(1) To the Mayor and Recorder of Canterbury.

I disapprove your arrest of several servants of public ministers. It must not be done again in the case of any person who has a pass from a minister [resident at the English Court]. If Mr. Percivall, the Savoy envoy's steward, is still in Canterbury give him the enclosed letter. If he is gone return it to me. Do not open letters found on persons going to France; but, if you have cause to suspect them, send them to me "to prevent the clamours that are made for what is newly passed."

P. 1. Ibid, p. 191.

his assigns, 1,000,000l. by way of imprest upon account for the 19 March. St. James'.

ROYAL WARRANT TO THE CHANCELLOR AND PRIVY COUNCIL OF SCOTLAND.

We have had under our consideration the 17th Act of the 6th Session of the current Parliament [of Scotland], which enacts that if the House is under adjournment at the time of the late King's death, his death should not dissolve it; but that it should meet in 20 days from that time and sit for six months, unless dissolved or adjourned sooner by his successor, according to the Declaration of Estates dated 11 April, 1689. According to that Declaration, the right to the Imperial Crown of Scotland is now devolved on us, and we are resolved that the Parliament shall meet as soon as possible, since we repose full trust in their zeal and loyalty to us and the constitution of the Government, which they proved in the time of King William III. Having many important affairs to settle which we cannot possibly adjust in so short a time, we require you to adjourn the House from 14 April next, to which it was last adjourned, to 26 May, when all the members shall attend at Edinburgh in the usual way.
We are fully resolved that our Parliament shall meet on that day without further delay.

Same. THE QUEEN TO THE SAME.

Your letter gives us a very satisfactory account of your proceedings. We thank you for your expressions of loyalty, and expect your care, at the present juncture, in all things which concern the peace and security of our ancient Kingdom.

* Unless otherwise stated, these Scottish Warrants are overwritten with the Royal Sign Manual and countersigned by a Secretary of State for Scotland as mentioned above, pp. 2, 3.
We are very sensible of the loss which these Kingdoms have sustained by the death of King William, "who, under God, was their deliverer from Popery and arbitrary power." We thank you for your loyalty to his memory; "and we shall ever think that those who have been faithful to him will continue to be so to us, being that it is our Royal resolution and firm intention to maintain the Protestant interest, and to govern our people according to their laws and to protect them in all their concerns, civil and ecclesiastick." We think it necessary that all persons in public trust, whether civil or military, should take the oaths of allegiance and assurance as you and the other Lords of the Privy Council here have done. We leave the time of their doing it to your appointment.

We have ordered the Lord High Admiral of England to direct the commander of the frigates, which have on board the regiments of Cols. Row and Ferguson to obey your orders either for their debarquing or sailing to Holland; but unless you find it absolutely necessary that they continue in Scotland, we expect that you will not detain them, seeing they are a part of those troops designed for the assistance of our Allies abroad. But we empower you to act in this matter as you think best for our service.

We intend as soon as possible to take the affairs of Scotland in hand, and to despatch the Duke of Queensberry as Commissioner there and all our other [Scottish] servants who are here. Give directions to all the Privy Council and our other servants to attend our service there.

20 March. Whitehall.

Vernon to the Commissioners of Trade and Plantations.

Queen's command:—To send you enclosed extract of a letter from Mr. Robinson, her Majesty's Resident in Sweden, together with a project of a convention between England and Sweden for regulating commerce during a war. You are to consider it and report on its conveniency and practicability.

Also note that the extract and project were entered in the Book of public Acts.

Warrant by the Lords Commissioners of the Treasury to the Auditor of the Exchequer.*

To pay to Sir Thomas Littleton, Treasurer of the Navy, or his successor, any sums not exceeding 1,000,000l. in the whole by way of imprest and upon account for the use and service of the Navy and the victualling thereof, to be paid out of moneys in the Exchequer applicable thereto.

* See the note to the Warrant above, page 5, to which this is similar in form. Hereinafter the date of these orders endorsed on these Warrants is simply calendared as "Date of Order" at the end of each Warrant.
21 March. Whitehall.

1. To the Lord Mayor of York.

Acknowledges news of the proclamation of the Queen at York. Six lines. S.P. Dom., Entry Book 102, p. 338.

2. To the High Sheriff of York.

Similar to foregoing. Seven lines. Ibid.

23 March. Whitehall.

1. To the Lord High Admiral.

Queen's command:—To send you the address of the House of Commons relating to the several abuses in the Victualling Office. You are to give the necessary orders for remedying the same for the future.

P. ⅓. Ibid, p. 339. Enclosing the resolution as follows:—

18 March, 1701(2). Resolved:—
That it appears to this House that there hath been a great abuse committed in her Majesty’s Brew-House at St. Katherine’s by drawing off the first worts to the defrauding of her Majesty and prejudice of the seamen.
That the pretence of taking perquisites in her Majesty's Office of Victuallling tends much to the prejudice of the service.
Ordered:—That these resolutions be laid by way of address before her Majesty by such members of the House as are of the Privy Council.

P. ⅔. Ibid.

2. To Same.

Queen’s command:—To send you an advice received showing the intention of the French to erect a fortification in Newfoundland. You are to consider it, that care may be taken for the security of the Queen’s subjects in those parts.

Deposition of John Fallais, of the Island of Guernsey, taken 9 March, 1701½.

Sworn, he said:—Was at Brest about three months since. Nine three-deck ships and sixteen other men-of-war, of from thirty to sixty guns, were then fitting out there, but on what errand he knows not. On 2 March last deponent was at St. Malo’s, and forty-five ships of from twelve to forty guns were fitting out there for Chapeau Rouge in Newfoundland. Twenty-five of these vessels were in the road, and almost ready to sail, and every ship was to carry stones for building a fortification at Chapeau Rouge to mount upwards of 100 guns. With copy of Fallais’ mark, taken at Poole before Hill Williams, Deputy-Mayor, and Moses Durell, Sheriff.

3. To the Duke of Ormond.

The Queen desires to speak with your Grace at the “Cabinet Council” which is appointed to meet on Wednesday next at 1702.

5 p.m. at St. James', in relation to the expedition intended by the land forces that are to be put on board the fleet.

24 March. Royal Warrant to the Lords Justices of Ireland.

St. James'.

By order in Council of 18 December last, it was ordered that 3,000 snaphaunce muskets and 1,000 large pikes should be delivered out of the stores of the Ordnance here for the supply of magazines in Ireland. The cost of these, and the freight thereof, will amount to 3,316/. 10s. 0d. This sum is to be paid out of the Irish Revenue. When you receive the arms, give the necessary directions for making this payment (and also a sum for remittance and exchange on the same) to the Treasurer of our Ordnance here.

25 March. Warrant of the Lords Commissioners of the Treasury to the Auditor of the Exchequer.

Cockpit, Treasury Chambers.

By virtue of the "general letters of Privy Seal" of 13 March, and in pursuance of a Sign Manual warrant of 24 March, we require you to draw an order for paying to William, Lord Bishop of Worcester, Lord Almoner, or his assigns, 300l. without account or other charge for the charges of 38 poor men and 38 poor women, for money, shirts, stockings, victuals and all other expenses whatsoever relating to the Maundy, to be paid out of any sums in receipt of the Exchequer applicable to the uses of the civil Government.

25 March. Royal Warrant to the Chancellor and Commissioners of the Treasury of Scotland.

St. James'.

We understand that after the dissolution of the General Assemblies in the time of King William, 400l. was always allowed by him for assisting the ministry to defray the charge of their public meetings and judicatures and their other concerns in common. Pay that sum to the Moderator of the Commission, either out of the readiest of the Bishop's rents or, failing that, out of the revenue most readily available, to be spent by him as the Commission shall order, and for which he and the Commission shall account to the next Assembly.

26 March. Minutes of the Committee of Council.

To write to the Earl of Marlborough that four regiments be sent from Holland to go on board the fleet, to be replaced by new raised regiments.

Two companies to be added to the Fusiliers and that regiment to be recruited to the numbers of the other regiments.

The 200 dragoons are proposed to be taken out of Floyd's regiment, which makes up that number without being recruited.

It is proposed that five regiments be sent from Ireland aboard the fleet, that the Queen's directions for this purpose be signified to the Lord Lieutenant, and that they be provided with tents from the Office of Ordnance here.

Three regiments more to be provided with tents, and 600 saddles and bridles for dragoons to be furnished by the Ordnance.

A list of the train is already before the Office of Ordnance. 100 horses for the train to be provided by the Ordnance. Shipping for the train horses for six months, per mensem [sic].

Sixteen engineers to be provided by the Ordnance.

Two thousand spare muskets to be added to the train. Regiments all to have muskets, and their proportion of pikes to be carried.

26 March. Vernon to the Earl of Romney.

Whitehall.

The Queen orders me to send you the enclosed demands of the Duke of Ormond for a sea expedition. You are to consider them. Let the Queen know what the Office of Ordnance has in store of these demands, what sum of money will be necessary for providing the rest and in what time the whole can be got ready, "the service requiring the greatest dispatch."

I send two papers sent in by the Duke. Please return them as I have had no time to have copies made.

The Queen expects your report to be laid before her at the Cabinet Council on Sunday next.

P. 3. S.P. Dom., Entry Book 206-7, p. 20; accompanied by:—

The Duke of Ormond's demands for the Office of Ordnance for the sea expedition.

1. A train of artillery as is specified in a paper already delivered to the Office of Ordnance, a copy whereof is annexed.*

2. Officers, ministers and attendants for the train as proposed in a paper, No. 6.

3. Sixteen engineers to attend the train.

4. One hundred horses, with harness, for use of the train.

5. Shipping and provisions for the train and horses belonging to it for six months.

6. Tents for eight complete regiments of foot, according to the new establishment.

7. Each soldier in these regiments is to have a musket, besides the usual proportion of pikes. Four more regiments which are to come from Holland are to be provided with muskets and pikes in the like manner.

8. 2,000 more muskets, making in all 4,000 spare muskets.

9. 600 saddles and bridles for dragoons.

Vernon's Letters.

1. To the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland.

The Queen designs five entire regiments, according to the new establishment, to be drawn out of Ireland to be put on board the fleet this summer. Her Majesty desires you to give the necessary orders for completing these regiments and preparing them for embarking at once.

2. To the Commissioners of Transport.*

The Queen directs you to prepare an estimate for shipping 285 horses, with hay and oats, for three months, and for the cost of monthly supplies in case they remain out longer. The estimate is to be ready to be laid before her Majesty by Sunday next.

P. 3. Ibid.

3. To the Lord High Admiral.

Sends petition of Captain John Hooper for consideration and report. Further pleasure.†

Petition of Hooper to the Queen, shewing that:—

Petitioner served King William as Captain of the Penzance. In June, 1696, on the complaint of Robert Haistwell he was suspended without a hearing by the Board of Admiralty, and in the following August was dismissed for discharging men for bribes upon the single testimony of his lieutenant, who was then actually dismissed the service for notorious neglect of duty.

Petitioner, now as then, utterly denies this charge, and hopes that, as his assignee is the only witness against him and is under the same sentence of the then Board, he may have no more credit than the Petitioner.

Petitioner has been dismissed from the Navy near six years, which would have in part, he hopes, expiated any offence which might have been proved against him.

Prays for remission of his sentence that he may be employed in the service.

The Queen received the letters from the General Assembly which were directed to the late King, and notes with satisfaction their gratitude for the late King’s favour and protection. The Queen graciously received the address from the Commission appointed by the last Assembly. Inform the Commission (now adjourned) of this when it re-assembles; and assure them of the Queen’s determination to maintain the present government of the Church and give all due encouragement to the ministers in the exercise thereof.

Petition to the Queen of Mary, wife of Luke Mathews.

Luke Mathews is now under sentence of death at Chelmsford jail, and petitioner shews that:—
Her husband six months ago listed himself in Captain Venter’s company. Three days later he and others made their escape out of a boat that was carrying them and others down the river to embark for Holland.
He was taken and committed to Newgate and lay there till last week, when he was sent to Chelmsford. There he and two others who escaped with him were indicted for robbing the boat of a pair of pistols and an old brass-mounted sword. Of this they were found guilty and five or six more acquitted. Petitioner has three small children and is with child, and prays for pardon of her husband, who would serve at sea.

28 March. Royal Warrant to the Chancellor and Privy Council of Scotland.

We hear that Allaster McDonald has been thrice tried before the Commission of Justiciary of the Northern district for robbery, and that, after the two first trials, he was reprieved by you and that you had voted to commute his sentence; but that in the meantime he has been again tried before the Commission on a similar charge and sentenced to die on April 3. Several of the Commissioners differed on the matter, and have so reported to you, and some of the Privy Council of Scotland who are here think McDonald may be reprieved till the proceedings of the aforesaid trial are before you. Reprieve him till 10 June next, and investigate the trial and proceedings, and report to us thereon. Meantime stop the execution of the sentence.

31 March. Vernon to the Commissioners of the Treasury.

The Queen having the charge of the sea expedition under consideration, desires me to send the several particulars proposed by the Duke of Ormond and the Earl of Romney for which provision should be made. These are:

- Payment of general officers and contingent charge thereon.
- Shipping for 425 horses and provision for these whilst on board.
- Sea victuals for 230 dragoons and for general officers and their servants, and for the officers and attendants of the train of artillery.

The Queen desires you to consider these particulars and report your opinion as to how far they may be supplied out of the money given by Parliament for the service of this year, and what will still remain to be furnished if any other means can be found for it.

The Earl of Romney has represented that 10,000l. must necessarily be furnished to the Office of Ordnance within a week in order to enable them to furnish such particulars for the expedition as are not in their stores. The Queen wishes you to consider how this sum may be supplied.

P.S.—The Duke of Ormond’s demands are enclosed. I have not the Earl of Romney’s list yet, but I think the number of officers and attendants of the train for whom he desires sea provisions is 157.

ROYAL WARRANT to the LORD LIEUTENANT and LORDS JUSTICES of IRELAND.

On 28 March we ordered a fifth regiment, such as Major-General Thomas Earle should appoint, to be made ready to embark in the same condition as the four regiments already ordered. Take steps to pay the colonel of the new regiment 40 shillings a man for so many men (excluding servants) as are, by our late orders on the matter, directed to be added to each regiment. Cause the new regiment to be paid all its arrears on embarkation, and see that it is treated in all ways as the other four regiments.*

Pass a commission under the Great Seal of Ireland making them Lords Justices accordingly during pleasure. They shall act according to the terms of the letters and to any written and signed instructions which you, the Lieutenant, may think fit to give them. Your authority as Lord Lieutenant is to continue undiminished. You shall insert a clause in the letters of appointment prescribing that they shall not affect the letters appointing you Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, dated 28 Dec., 1700, and also a clause determining the commission given by King William III to you, [sic] Narcissus, Archbishop of Dublin, and Henry, Earl of Drogheda. You shall issue a commission under the Great Seal of Ireland [to the present Lords Justices?] to administer the usual oath to the new Lords Justices.

Several papers have been laid before the Queen relating to Robert Colover, who is under condemnation for piracy. I send them so that you may report on the case in order that the Queen may consider whether she may grant Colover a pardon as desired. Despatch is necessary, because, as is alleged, the holding of an Admiralty Sessions for the trial of other pirates depends on the declaration of her Majesty’s pleasure in this matter.

Same. Vernon’s LETTERS.

1. To the Lords Commissioners of the Treasury.

The Queen commands that, as it is thought necessary to provide shipping for the transport of 420 horses, and about 400 men to use them, you will give the necessary orders to the Commissioners of Transports for the shipping and for provisions for these men and horses. The Queen desires to know in what time the shipping can be got ready, what the charge of the whole will amount to for three months or longer, and what will be the further charge per month.

As it is also necessary that an extraordinary provision of sea victuals be made for about 600 men that will be employed this summer at sea, above the number that are already taken care of, the Queen desires you to direct the Commissioners of Victualling to furnish the necessary supplies accordingly.

2. To the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland.

Queen’s command:—The five regiments prepared in Ireland for service are to embark at Kinsale on board such ships as shall be sent from hence for them. You are to give orders for the regiments to march towards Kinsale as soon as they are ready. The Queen desires to know how nearly complete those regiments are, and when they will be ready to embark.

MANCHESTER to the MASTER of the ORDANCE.

A representation from the Commissioners of Trade and Plantations has been laid before the Queen in which they submit that, for the complete arming of the militia of Virginia, which is now very necessary, 3,000 cases of pistols, 3,500 carabines for the horse, 500 firelocks for the foot, and 5,000 swords are necessary; besides 100 barrels of powder and ball in proportion. You are to consider and report how soon these may be provided, and at what cost. The charge will be borne, as is usual, by the colony, and I desire you to let me know whether Virginia is in debt to the Office of Ordnance on the like account, and whether you think there should be a storekeeper in Virginia to receive the arms, and deliver them out as ordered by the Governor.

The same Commissioners represent that 100 firelocks with 10 barrels of powder and ball must be sent to Newfoundland. You are to report how soon these can be ready, and what powder and ball are necessary for the cannon and mortars at Newfoundland; so that such stores may go there with these small arms &c.

The QUEEN to the LORD LIEUTENANT and LORDS JUSTICES or CHIEF GOVERNOR of IRELAND.

An Act for punishing mutiny in England passed in the present Parliament provides that its own provisions should apply to any forces then or afterwards on foot whether in Ireland or elsewhere.

The Act also empowered us, or the General commanding our Forces, to commission certain officers [details] to assemble courts-martial for trying mutineers and deserters. Grant commissions from time to time to any such officers to assemble such courts-martial as need requires, and to proceed to try, sentence and inflict punishment on offenders as prescribed by the Act "and according to the rules and methods of military discipline."

VERNON'S LETTERS.

1. To the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland.

I send your Excellency the description of an Irish friar, which I received from my Lord Marlborough. I have taken steps to apprehend him if he lands at Harwich, or comes up the river, but as it is represented that he intends for Ireland, to raise disturbances there, pray send directions to seize him there, either at landing or wherever he can be found.

P. 3. S.P. Dom., Entry Book 102, p. 344. Enclosing:—

Description.

Father Bernardo Tyrconnell, a Dominican friar, went the first inst. (April) from Brussels for Ghent, in order to go from thence to Holland or Zealand, and to embark for London, where he is to apply himself to the Spanish Consul. He carries with him 800 guineas, and the Spanish Consul is to supply him with anything else up to 12,000 guineas. He is to meet in London with a French refugee, named M. de Salent, who has actually two sisters in France that receive a pension from the most Christian King for having changed their religion. This M. de Salent or Salint is, it seems, engaged with Father Tyrconnell to form a faction in Ireland in favour of the pretended Prince of Wales, and to bring him into the Kingdom during the commotion. He is a little lean man (éc., as above, p. 15).

2. To the Recorder of London.

The Queen has appointed a Cabinet Council to meet at St. James’ to-morrow evening, at which you may have an opportunity to give her Majesty an account of the last sessions. Six lines. Ibid, p. 346.

3. To Sir Henry Dutton Colt.

The Queen has been informed that the directions given in her late proclamation for due observance of the Sabbath have not been respected, but that “there was last Sunday a great resort in coffee and chocolate houses and other public houses, even in the time of Divine Service.” Command to you and other Justices of the Peace, to see the law in this matter put into execution, and to give orders to the constables accordingly.

REPORT of the LORD HIGH ADMIRAL (the Earl of Pembroke and Montgomery) on the petition of Henry Killegrew, Esq.

This petition sets out that Killegrew was discharged from the command of the fleet on 6 Nov., 1693, and has ever since been out of employment, without any allowance for his support on shore till, in January, 1699 [1700], the late King allowed him half-pay as Admiral of the Blue to commence from 1 Oct., 1697. But as the year before his last command in the fleet he was allowed the whole pay of Admiral of the Blue for the time he was on shore, and as other flag officers have since been in like manner allowed the full of their pay, he prays for an order for full pay “on the ordinary of the Navy” as Admiral of the Blue, from 6 Nov., 1693 (the date when he was discharged from being a joint Admiral of the Fleet), to 30 Sept., 1697, the day preceding his allowance, and that his present allowance may be increased to the whole pay of an Admiral. I have considered this petition and report:—

(1) By Order in Council, dated 22 Feb., 1693-4, the late King established an allowance of half-pay on all flag officers, commanders of ships, and other officers, whilst they were ashore in

The time of peace. These allowances were settled on the ordinary estimate of the Navy.

(2) As alleged in the petition, the King ordered an allowance of half-pay to "Mr. Killegrew," as Admiral of the Blue from 1 Oct., 1697, the commencement of the peace with France.

(3) On a representation from the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty, the King, on 18 April, 1700, established an allowance of pay to officers serving at sea, and to others out of employment on shore, instead of the double pay at sea and half-pay on shore settled by the aforementioned Order in Council of 22 Feb., 1693–4.

(4) Those allowances were made and still continue to Mr. Killegrew.

Both these establishments restrain the said allowances to such flag officers and others as shall be out of employment in time of peace only, and the said allowances are particularly ascertained therein. I cannot therefore advise the Queen to gratify Mr. Killegrew's request, which is contrary to the establishment, and would be used as a precedent to ground other demands.

The late King, notwithstanding the establishments, did order allowance of full pay as a Rear-Admiral to the Marquis of Carmarthen whilst out of employment on shore. He had served in this post in the fleet. War being now declared with France and Spain, the allowance to Killegrew cannot be continued unless the Queen, following the late King's practice, settles some pension on him.

Vernon to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland.

Corrects his last to same of April 2 (above, p. 19). The five regiments are to embark at Cork, not Kinsale, and the orders for their march are to be varied accordingly.

6 Ap. St. James'.

Royal Warrant to the Earl of Romney as Master General of the Ordnance.

We think it right that a train of artillery should forthwith be prepared to go with the land forces embarking under the command of the Duke of Ormond, and that several bomb-vessels should be fitted out to attend our fleet for the summer's service. Cause a train of artillery, consisting of such brass ordnance, mortars, shot, shells, ammunition &c., as are mentioned in a schedule hereto to be forthwith prepared and fitted out for sea accordingly; and cause the stores mentioned in another schedule hereto to be provided for the service of the bomb-vessels. The officers, gunners, &c. for the train and bomb-vessels shall be established in pay according to the annexed lists. The officers of the train shall be paid out of the Treasury of the Ordnance, and those of the bomb-vessels out of the money appropriated for sea service. The officers and men to be paid as from 1702.

1 April. You are empowered to add to or take from (from time to time) the "natures" of Ordnance, proportion of stores and numbers of men attending the said train of artillery and vessels.

Schedule I. A list of the officers, ministers and other attendants appointed to attend the "descent train" ordered to sea with the Duke of Ormond.

Gives sums paid per day and year to the officers going with the train. They are a colonel, major, adjutant, 16 engineers, a paymaster, commissary of stores, his clerk, nine conductors of stores, a surgeon and his mate and four pontoon men.

Gives details as to how a company of gunners is made up—a captain, first and second lieutenants, two gentlemen of the Ordnance &c., and pay to each person. Gives also details as to how a company of miners is made up, and pay to each person.

Schedule II. A list of officers, ministers and other attendants appointed to attend the bomb-vessels ordered to sea.

Gives daily and yearly pay given to two fire-masters, sixteen fire-workers, thirty-two bombardiers, a commissary and paymaster, his assistant, nine conductors of the stores, a master carpenter, his mate and fifteen carpenters.

Schedule III. (a) List of mortars, powder, granado shells, carcasses &c. to be forthwith issued out of the stores in the Office of Ordnance for fitting out eight bomb-vessels now going to sea.

This is an elaborate list of artillery ammunition, and other stores:—Fixed shells, unfixed do., round carcasses, corne powder, tampeons, bavins, hurdles, match, hides, charcoal, bedding, soap &c. In the case of each item the number or quantity to be sent out is specified.

(b) List of ordnance, mortars, powder, shot and other stores forthwith to be issued out of the Office of Ordnance for the forces now going to sea.

The title of this list shews its contents. These comprise all things necessary for artillery—the guns themselves, their carriages, spare parts, round shot, granado shells, ladles. Further lists follow of lanterns, buckets, Muscovy lights, grease, hammers, canvas, candles, tarpaulin and many other stores for an army in the field.*

* To set out these lists in detail would take much space. They are very full and most instructive as to the thousand and one paraphernalia of a field force in Queen Anne’s day; but their interest is for specialists, and I therefore confine myself to a general account of their contents, which will indicate to the reader the nature of the details.

STATE PAPERS, DOMESTIC.

VERNON'S LETTERS.

1. To Baron Hatsell.

Queen's command:—To send you the petition of Philip Devon, condemned at the last Surrey Assizes. Report how the fact appeared to you on the trial, that the Queen may consider the question of pardon.

A note adds that the petition sets out that the petitioner was under 17 and had been but a short time in such bad company. The Minister and Churchwardens of St. Martin, Vintry, London, underwrote it with a certificate that petitioner had faithfully served his master, John Dobbins, waterman, and had not, so far as they know; committed any crime before.

2. To the Lord Almoner.

Sends enclosed petition. The Queen desires that all further petitions asking charity should go before the Lord Almoner for his examination and report.

P. ³. Ibid, pp. 350-1. Enclosing:—

Petition of Baron de Neuville to the Queen, shewing that:—

Petitioner had a small pension on the Privy Purse, which was granted by the late Queen in consideration of his being a refugee and of his son being a page of honour. The pension has stopped owing to the late King's death. Prays for the Queen's charity. Cannot support his family.

3. To Baron Tracy.

Queen's command:—To send you the enclosed petition of John Banfill, lately condemned at Exeter Assizes.

Report &c. (as above letter to Baron Hatsell).

P. ³. Ibid.

A note adds that Banfill's petition says that he was condemned of felony on very slender evidence, and is a young man with a wife and several small children, who must perish if his sentence is executed.

He is anxious to list himself in the service of the Queen by sea or land. This is his first offence.

Same. Manchester to the Mayor of Rye.

I had yours of the 5th saying you had stopped James Deering, of Bartholomew Lane, London, who was going over to France with the papers which you have sent me. Your action is approved, and you are to liberate Deering, that he may come here and be examined, which his employer has promised he shall do. Do not permit him, when liberated, to go to France.

Pembroke* to Captain Beaumont, commanding the ships in the Downs.
The French may make some attempt on Holland or Zeland with their ships of war and land forces.  You are therefore, by the Queen’s command, to see that the ships in the margin† are in constant readiness to go over and serve on the coast of Holland.  If you hear from the States General of the United Provinces or from the States of Zeland that any ships of war are designed from Dunkerque or any parts of France to make any attempt on Holland or Zeland, and if they ask you to go over there with your command, you shall go over and proceed as they desire from time to time until further order, “it being hoped that the ships of the States General will be as soon ready to be employed on this service.”  Use all endeavours to protect them from any insults or attempts.  As ships join you from time to time in the Downs, keep them constantly ready for the above-mentioned service and give me an account of your proceedings therein.

Treasury Warrant.
To draw an order to pay any sum not exceeding 40,000l. to Thomas Lloyd, Paymaster of her Majesty’s Works.

Vernon’s Letters.
1. To Pembroke.
The Committee of Council that met here this morning have appointed to meet here again at 7 p.m. to-morrow.  They think it absolutely necessary to speak with your Lordship, and some of the flag officers and Commissioners of the Navy, in relation to the charge of the sea expedition.  They desire your Lordship’s presence and that you will send Mr. Churchill, Mr. Sargesson and Mr. Lyddall; also Sir G. Rooke if he is then in town.

2. To the Duke of Ormond.
Desires his presence at the meeting mentioned in the foregoing.
Four lines.  Ibid, p. 29.

† These are the Resolution (3rd), Hampshire, Litchfield, Medway and Dover (4th), Mermayde and Rye (5th) and Swan and Flamborough (6th).
1702.

_A note_ adds:—The petition shows that Sanders was condemned at the last Surrey Assizes held in the borough of Southwark for robbing on the highway to the value of a guinea. Petitioner is about 23 and likely in person. No previous convictions. Willing to serve by land or sea, or in any of her Majesty’s plantations.

_In all p. ½_ S.P. Dom., Entry Book 102, p. 352.

2. To Josiah Burchett.

I have received my Lord Admiral’s of the 6th relating to a licence to be obtained to cut masts and “boltsprits” to be furnished from New England for the Navy. I find it necessary to have a copy of the contract. Please procure me one from the Navy Board.

3. To the Commissioners of Transports.

Please send me an account of what orders you have received to provide shipping for bringing five regiments of foot from Ireland, and when the ships will be ready to sail. I understand my Lord Admiral has appointed a convoy at Spithead to go with these ships. The service requires despatch.

Sends petitions of Ann Holding and Mary Lewis for consideration and report whether the petitioners are real objects of the Queen’s compassion and bounty.

_P. ¼._ Followed by:—

_Note of petitions._ Ann Holding is the widow of Captain William Holding, formerly commander of the London, who served King Charles II several years as a sea commander. Several sums were due to him at his death “on account of his half pay, out of the Exchequer, on the firehearts.” She has received nothing and is left with a family of children.

Mary Lewis’ husband was a seafaring man and was blown up in the Carlisle, leaving her with three small children.

10 Ap. The Commissioners of Transports to [Vernon].

As to the ships for bringing five regiments of foot from Ireland, we have to report: We have already given the Lord High Admiral an account of what ships we had ready to the quantity of 2,500 [tons] to meet any occasion. We understand he has ordered the Commissioners for Victualling the Navy to put provisions on board them at once for 3,000 men. When this is done we will order the ships to Spithead immediately.

Whitehall.  I send enclosed advice concerning four French privateers seen by a Danish ship 10 or 11 days ago on the Dogger Bank. One of the members for Hull put it into my hands.
A note adds.—The enclosure was a letter of William Hydes, of Hull, to William Maister, M.P., saying that a Dane reported that he had been boarded by the French privateers seen on the Dogger Bank. They took some deals from him. Dated 9 April. P. ¾. S.P. Dom., Entry Book 102, pp. 353–4.

11 Ap.  Manchester to the Mayor of Dover.
Whitehall.  I had yours, wherein you say you stopped four soldiers, who had deserted from the English regiments in Flanders, and put them on board ship to be brought here. Your conduct is approved, and do the same in the case of other deserters who may come from Flanders, giving me notice of it, and of the regiments to which the men belonged. I hope we shall find a way to reimburse you. Please send me the names of the four men.

To draw an order to pay 10,000l. to Mr. Charles Shales, the Queen’s goldsmith, or his assigns, for jewels and other things to be provided by him for the Queen’s coronation.

Whitehall.  1. To the Commissioners of Victualling.
Pray let me know whether the victuals ordered by the Lord High Admiral for 3,000 land troops are on board the transport ships, and, if not, how soon they will be so.

2. To Baron Hatsell.
Queen’s command:—To send you the enclosed petition of Thomas Watercorn, convicted at the last Surrey Assizes. Report on Wednesday next, when the judges are ordered to attend and give an account of their circuits, how the fact appeared at the trial, so that the Queen may consider a pardon. Execution to be deferred till the report is made.
Also note.—The petition states that petitioner was convicted for robbery of a hat, cane, periwig, and 18d. in money. No previous offences. Seduced by ill company. Prays for a reprieve that he may serve the Queen in any part of the world.
3. To Mr. Justice Powis.

Similar to foregoing in relation to George Taylor convicted at the last York Assizes.

Also note.—The petition of Elizabeth Taylor, wife of George Taylor, sets out that one Letherland who lodged in her and her husband's house was apprehended for coining, and her husband was tried with him at the last York Assizes, and convicted as his confederate for having an edger and coining press in his custody. As to the edger it was proved to have been in Letherland's custody, and the instrument called a coining press had lain openly in a back kitchen for two years in sight of servants &c., and was not believed to be a coining press by Mr. Harris of the Mint, who went down to see it after the arrest. Petitioner's husband has a good character, and knows nothing of coiners. The petitioner and her children must perish if he suffers death. Prays for pardon and reprieve. A certificate of near 100 neighbours was attached speaking highly of Taylor as a friend and neighbour.

4. To Baron Hatsell.

Similar to the last letter to him (p. 27); in relation to Edward Hawkins, convicted at the last Essex Assizes.

Note.—The petition shows that petitioner, who was lately under the command of Captain Waters, was condemned for making his escape from an officer who wanted to send him to Flanders. No previous convictions. Asks for a reprieve "though banished to the furthermost part of the world."

5. To Lord Chief Justice Trevor.

Similar to foregoing letter to Baron Hatsell and on behalf of Wm. Mapledoram, condemned at the last Assizes at Taunton.

Also note that, according to his mother's petition, Mapledoram was convicted of felony and burglary. Good character. First conviction. Has been respited by the Lord Chief Justice Trevor till the 21st of April. Prays for pardon. Is young and willing to serve anywhere.

P. ¼. Ibid, p. 359.

6. To Pembroke.

The Queen approves of the payment of Mr. Dummer during the time of his suspension, for which he has lately petitioned. Give order accordingly.

P. ¼. Ibid.
Also report of the Lord High Admiral on Dummer's petition. He has considered it and has referred it to the Attorney General, who advises that, as Dummer was only suspended and not removed, his salary accrued during the period of suspension. Has no objection to the salary being paid.

Whitehall.

Manchester to Pembroke.

I send, by the Queen's command, a petition of the Royal African Co. It prays that the Admiral in America may be advised to procure them satisfaction for a ship of theirs laden with negroes which, when it put into Havana for provisions, was seized and disposed of by the Governor. The Queen desires you to give the Admiral in those seas such directions as you think fit for procuring satisfaction for the merchants from the said Governor.

Vicualling Office.

The Commissioners of Victualling to [Vernon].

We only got orders on the 9th to victual the ships for 3,000 land soldiers. This was at once commenced and has since been proceeding. We think it will be finished in five or six days more.

Also Treasury Warrant in execution of the above.

Admiralty Office.
Josiah Burchett to Robert Yard.
Sends, by the Lord Admiral's orders, copies of letters received from the West Indies, giving accounts of the proceedings of the French ships there.
P. 2. (Signed.) Endd. S.P. Dom., Naval 6, 52. Enclosing:—
A. Captain Richard Kirkby to [Burchett].
The Kinsale arrived here on 9 February, but the Government were apprehensive of the motions of the French fleet here and asked for my stay here till we had ascertained them. On Thursday afternoon last, a sloop from Jamaica arrived, having seen them on the 13th with four flags heading W.N.W. seven or eight leagues to leeward from Guardeloupa. Since that I have taken the men from the sick quarters who were unsuspected of infection (I had 60 ashore sick). I must leave about nine behind, being about to sail to join Admiral Benbow. Letters by the said sloop report the Spanish flota at Vera Cruz, having taken their money and plate ashore, and refuse the conduct of the French. Admiral Benbow is at Jamaica with 12 sail and the Governor is there before this, having past Nevis in the Bristol with ten sail more beside the fireships, storeships and bomb above three weeks ago. The Kinsale is cruising to windward.

The supercargo of the Blessing sloop has just arrived. He confirms the report of the French sailing to leeward on the news of 45 sail being at the Isle of Ash. He could not tell what they were, but says the French first designed upon this place, but that, getting news that we were very populous and preparing for our defence, they changed their minds and went to attack the Leeward Islands; and later, when they heard of the news from the Isle of Ash, sailed for that place on the 11th. This sloop was taken by one of their frigates about five leagues of [off] the island, and detained at Port St. Piers till the day before they sailed.

b. Captain George Maugham to [Same].

On 7th Nov. we parted from the York in a very violent storm which lasted 21 days. We came through it safely and reached Nevis. I there found the Bristol Experiment, Seahorse hulk, a bomb, ketch and two sloops, all which sailed for Jamaica next day. The Benjamin and two store ships have since come. We have landed our soldiers without loss. All are well and the islands very healthful. We hear that there are 28 French men-of-war at Martineco, from 44 to 104 guns. It is also reported that the ship of 104 guns struck going in and carried away most of her false keel, and that her gun deck is much settled and it will take a considerable time to secure it and that the fleet is very sickly. There being no good water here, I have been down to St. Christopher's to water, and am ready to sail to-night for Barbados.

P. ½. Copy. From the Kinsale at Nevis, Jan. 27, 170½. Ibid, 52B.

1. To Josiah Burchett.

I spoke lately with the Lord High Admiral about the Baltic Merchant, which is to carry my son's goods and equipage to Copenhagen. The ship is staid by contrary winds in Margate Road, and the master, having heard of French privateers at sea, does not know whether he should go on when the weather favours. The Lord Admiral kindly offered me a convoy. Pray let me know if one may be obtained, that I may inform the master what he can expect.

2. To the Attorney General.

Before King William's death directions were given for a warrant to be prepared by the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster for passing a grant to Lord Rivers of the office of Constable of Liverpool Castle and also of the office of butler, with the duty of prize of the said County Palatine, for 99 years; but, owing to his late Majesty's illness, the warrant was never signed. Lord Rivers has applied to the Queen for its signature. Queen's command:—To consider the same and report what is fit for the Queen to do. Further pleasure.

3. To the Commissioners of Victualling.

Referring to yours of the 14th:—Are the provisions for the 3,000 men yet on board the transport vessels? If this be actually done, let me know, that I may inform the Queen.

The Commissioners of Victualling to [Vernon].

Yours of the 18th. The provisions are not yet all on board the transports for 3,000 men. There were not enough men on board the ships to receive them as fast as we sent them. We told this to the Commissioners of Transports, as our accompanying letter shows. We have done all that can be done to expedite this work.

A. The Commissioners of Victualling to the Commissioners of Transports.

2. To Josiah Burchett.

4. To Same.

Sends a petition of the Russia Company. The Queen desires a report what may be done for the protection of the Archangel trade.
P. §. Ibid, p. 363. Enclosing:—

Petition to the Queen of the Governor and Company of Merchants trading to Russia, shewing that:—

They have great reason to fear that the King of Sweden may send men-of-war to Archangel this year, as he did last, "to hinder the trade of the said place in and out, which should he do, and thereby prevent the bringing of hemp and other naval stores from thence, which are already provided," it will not be possible for your Majesty's navy to be supplied next year, "since the trade from the Baltic is in a manner wholly obstructed."

They therefore urge the necessity of taking measures to protect the trade of Archangel. They consider this to be a matter of the utmost consequence.

5. To the Earl of Ranelagh.

The Duke of Ormond having proposed to the Lords of the Council that there should be an advance of six weeks' pay to the regiments that are ordered to sea under his command, and that officers and soldiers be cleared to 1 May, as also that there be an advance of the contingencies allotted for that service and that Colonel Lloyd receive 400l. in advance for providing hay and 300l. on account of the pay of his regiment for providing them with necessaries; their Lordships ask me to acquaint you with these particulars in order to their being complied with. If you have any objection, their Lordships, who meet here tomorrow at twelve o'clock, can hear it.

6. To the Commissioners of Transports.

Yours of the 10th told me that the ships allotted to bring five foot regiments from Ireland wait for their victuals. I hastened the victuallers, and to-day hear from them that the provisions would have been all on board by now had the ships been in a condition to take them in. The service suffers much from this delay. Pray enable me to tell the Queen when it will be ended.

7. To Same.

The Queen commands that you forthwith provide 1,000 tons of shipping over and above what is already ordered for the transport of the land forces that are to go along with the fleet.

Five lines. Ibid, p. 32.

8. To Same.

I am to direct you to attend a Committee of the Lords of the Council to-morrow at 12 at my office.

Three lines: with note of a similar letter to the Commissioners of Victualling.

In all p. 4. Ibid.

The Commissioners of Transports to [Vernon].

We hear that the Commissioners of Victualling say to your Honour that the transport ships appointed to fetch five regiments of foot from Ireland had had all their provisions on board by that time had they been in a position to take them in.

We assure your Honour that the said ships were actually ready to take in provisions on the 10th inst.; but we understand that they have stood still for want of provisions being sent on board, and have taken them in as fast as ever they came down. Yesterday we were among the ships at Deptford and found that no provisions had been sent down all day, except one lighter of beer and part of another. This lay alongside one of the ships for want of cooper's to fill it, as is usual, before it is taken on board. We should have told the Commissioners of Victualling this to-day had we not received your Honour's letter.

As ordered, we shall take up 1,000 tons more shipping as soon as may be, and shall attend the Committee of Council to-day as you direct.

P.S.—We desire her Majesty's pleasure as to what we must provide besides the 1,000 tons of shipping for the land soldiers that are to go with the fleet.

We have considered the letter you sent us from the Lord High Admiral regarding the two vessels employed formerly for carrying the packets between England and Spain. These boats were of considerable burden and carried above 20 guns each, and could not be sailed but at a greater cost than was proper in time of peace. We therefore proposed to the Lords of the Treasury that smaller boats might be employed, to which they agreed, and accordingly these large boats were left aside. We did not, however, dispose of them, as there was no certainty how the smaller boats would in all seasons go through the service and as there had been for some time apprehension of war; wherein these boats would need to be employed again, if correspondence should have to be continued directly to Spain or Portugal. Experience has now shown us that the new boats will perform the service well enough in time of peace, and we do not object to the old ones being employed in the Queen's service as the Lord High Admiral may direct if it be judged that they will not be needed [for the postal service] in time of war. But it is to be considered that these vessels were paid for out of the revenue of this Office and not built or equipped at the charge of the Navy.

The Commissioners of Transports to Vernon.

Send list described below. The first six are ready to be victualled and the rest will be so in three or four days.

In the 1,000 tons of shipping which you have lately been ordered to prepare for carrying the soldiers to go with the fleet you shall take care to provide what is usual and necessary for accommodating the men on board.

2. To the Commissioners of Victualling.

The Queen commands you to put the victuals you have lately been ordered to provide for 600 men on board such transport ships as are taken up for that service, and to take special care to appoint a proper agent to take care of the victuals provided for the land forces that are to serve this year at sea.

The amount of the money to be advanced, as already signified to you, to the Duke of Ormond for contingent charges is to be such as would accrue under that head in six months. It is to be paid (by you) to the Deputy Paymaster appointed for this expedition, who is to pay it out from time to time as ordered by the Duke of Ormond.

Colonel Collier [Lieut. Govr. of Jersey] to ———.

I hear from all who come from England that the Royal regiment of Fusiliers will be removed and that another regiment will be sent to relieve it. I hope we may have, as we always have had, some companies more than "Gurnsey." We have three garrisons here, and they have but one. Since the peace we have had six companies, and they but four. I ask that we may have at least seven companies out of twelve. We should have a company of dragoons, and the chief charge for them would be for transportation. To save this, I offer to raise such a company myself in this island, where we have enough horses and men "that knows every corner of the country and most of them gentlemen."

The Commissioners of Transports to Vernon.

We yesterday applied to the Commissioners of the Treasury for money for the extra 1,000 tons of shipping which have been ordered to take the forces with the fleet, and to meet the cost of fitting them to accommodate the men on board. Their Lordships said they had had no notice of the matter, and asked us to let you know, that they might have her Majesty’s pleasure therein.

P.S.—The seven transport ships preparing to go and bring back soldiers from Ireland are provisioned, and we shall to-day order them to go at once to Spithead.

Manchester to the Postmasters General.*

Several deserters from the Queen’s troops in Flanders have lately found an easy reception on packets between Dover and Ostend or Newport. Pray direct the commander of the packet-boats to stop them when they come to them, exhort them to return to their duty, and by no means bring them over.

Same. Vernon’s Letters.

1. To the Postmasters General.

There will be an occasion of sending an express from hence to-morrow night to Holland. Give timely directions to the agent of the packet-boats at Harwich to have a boat ready to carry over the express when he arrives.

2. To the Commissioners of Transports.

On receiving yours of to-day I immediately signified to the Commissioners of the Treasury the Queen’s command that the necessary instructions should be given for taking up 1,000 tons of shipping and providing what may be necessary for accommodating the soldiers on board.

I am glad the transports for Ireland are provisioned and ready, and shall inform the Queen and Lord High Admiral, that the convoy may not fail of orders to sail with the transports when they arrive at Spithead.

9. To the Earl of Ranelagh.

I send you a statement of the demand of the King of Denmark made by virtue of the last treaty with that Crown. I received it from Mr. Hooke, secretary to Prince George of Denmark, and I have shown it to Mr. Cadogan, who has made the comments which you will find written in English. I think it is beyond dispute that 100,000 crowns are owing to Denmark under the treaty of 1696, and it is clear that 75,000 are due for two quarters subsidy ending the 15th March last. Since I understand from Mr. Blathwayt that these payments are to come from your Lordship, please consider of what consequence it is to make good all contracts with those who furnish us with troops, and accordingly move the Lords of the Treasury for power to answer these demands.

P. 3. S.P. Dom., Entry Book 102, p. 381. Enclosing:—

The State of the Debt to Denmark.

The King of Great Britain owes:—

Crowns.

1. Arrears of subsidy due under the Treaty of 1696 .... .. 100,000
   Compensation .... .. 200,000
   ... ... 300,000

One half [was to be paid?] when the troops marched and the other half six months later at Amsterdam.

2. For levying men:—
   3,320 horse at 80 crowns each ... 265,600
   6,174 infantry at 30 crowns each ... 185,220
   Total 450,820, of which the half [which is claimed] is ... 225,410

3. Two quarters' subsidies since 15 June, 1701, to be paid in specie at Hamburg ... 75,000
   The King further owes under the Treaty of 15 August, 1689, for the transport of troops, in specie ... 240,000
   Of this he paid in 1689 and 1690, 220,500, leaving due a balance of ... 19,500
   Under head 1 the King owes still in currency [en courante] ... 200,000

[Mr. Cadogan's comment.] By the second article in the last Treaty with Denmark the late King was obliged to pay whatever sums were due by the Treaty of 1696, half on the march of the troops and the other half six months after. A liquidation should have been found at the end of the Treaty, but no such liquidation was made and only 100,000 crowns were paid on account.

On the third head there is owing 75,000 crowns.

[Mr. Cadogan's comment.] By the last Treaty with Denmark the late King agreed to pay the King of Denmark 150,000 crowns a year in four quarterly payments. Two quarterly payments are due as demanded.

Under the Treaty of 15 June, 1701, the King owes 19,500 crowns; or, in all, in currency 200,000 crowns and in cash 94,000.

[Mr. Cadogan's comment.*] By the 8th article of the last Treaty the late King agreed to pay the King of Denmark whatever was due by the Convention of 1689 both for transport of the troops to Ireland and for their pay. A liquidation was to be made within a year after the ratification of the Treaty, and the payment then to be made at Hamburg.

The Jurats of the Royal Court of Guernsey to [the Privy Council].

We have received your lordships’ of 14 January with a request to say why we did not allow the appeal of William Dobree from a sentence given in favour of Peter Gosslin in the Royal Court on 14 December, 1700.

Litigation against Gosslin, eldest son of his late father, Peter Gosslin, by those that were seized of the real estate of the heirs of Thomas de Rozell, has long been proceeding. Details as to the litigation, which has been on foot since 1690. On 27 July, 1695, the Court ordered Dobree to answer Gosslin’s action for the warranty of the rent of 6 quarters 1½ bushels of wheat that Thomas De Lisle, as guardian of Daniel de Beauvoir, demanded of him. This judgment was affirmed on appeal. Dobree appealed to the Privy Council, but his appeal was not prosecuted, and Gosslin again sued him on 14 December, 1700, for rent and arrears, and got judgment. Dobree, being refused leave to appeal, appealed “by way of deliance.”

An eldest son is never received to quit or renounce for himself and his co-heirs except they be present and consent. We could not, under the circumstances, admit a second appeal.

[2 May.]

Mr. MACKY's Memorial in relation to the intercourse of letters between ENGLAND and FRANCE.

During the last war England forbade all correspondence immediately between England and France on account of King James residing there, in order to prevent a correspondence between him and his adherents in England; but, the intercourse of letters being open between France and Holland, it is well known that correspondence passed as easily between England and France (through Holland) as if our packet-boats had gone. Italian and French letters came under cover to Antwerp and Amsterdam, and the only result was that our merchants paid double for their letters; the Dutch had the benefit of the postage, "and had intelligence of all Italian trade and of prices carried into France at least two days before us." "If, therefore, we are to enter again into such a war as will oblige us to throw up all correspondence with France, it will be reasonable that the Dutch be obliged not to send any post to Flanders as well as we no pacquet boat."

The going of the packet-boats during the war, besides the benefit of carrying of letters, will save the nation at least 7,000l. a year, which it lost last war in hiring ships for exchange of prisoners, besides the expense of prisons and of merchantmen in waiting for an exchange to be made. The French will be glad of it, for it will save them the 12 livres a man, which they paid for all their prisoners who were brought to them.

If we continue to exact that sum it will almost defray the charge of the packet-boats, which (for hire of the boats and seamen's wages and provisions) is under 1,600l. a year.

If there is such a war as makes it impossible for anyone, or any letters, to pass from England to France without the penalty of high treason, then some persons at Dover should be joined in commission with Mr. Macky, the present manager of the packet-boats, to inspect the passage and take care that these boats carry nothing but prisoners.

Enclosing:—

A. Captain Culliford, Commander of the Hastings to the Secretary of the Admiralty.

Seeing the squadron sail out at St. Helen's I made the best of my way after them, and that evening, the ebb being done, I anchored a little to the westward of the Reculvers, and the Rear-Admiral off Dunnose. I saw a small vessel come in from out at sea, which anchored between the Reculvers and Dunnose. She turned out on examination [details] to be a French privateer. My lieutenant in the pinnace fired on her when she tried to sail away, and took her. I did my utmost to get up with the flag, but could not do so, owing to wind and towing the captive, till yesterday. I anchored with the sternmost of them then off the Highland of St. Albans. My cable parted in a great sea. I came then for this place and received orders to clean. I shall secure the prisoner and her crew, but will allow nothing to be embezzled. They say they were looking for Dutchmen on our coast, having war proclaimed against them on the 24th April (O.S.), and that they and three other privateers had on 28th captured a Dutchman, but they would not say with what she was laden. There are ten privateers, with 2 to 6 guns each out of "Diepe." Asked for French news, they say they knew of none but that they had no wars with England. The vessel has two pattereroes and several sorts of small arms.

At Plymouth they pretended that they wanted to go to Topsham to take in drapery, in order to which Lavalle Poitavin, the pretended merchant, was to go by land to prepare the goods, but in truth he went for London.

When the vessel came in here the like pretences were made; and the master is likewise gone for London. There was a report [details] at Plymouth that for something Poitavin had done, the [French?] Government had offered a price for him. I reported the matter to Sir S. Fairborne, Commander-in-Chief at Spithead, who ordered me to detain the vessel pending a message from the Lord High Admiral. I have had no such message yet; and Sir S. Fairborne is gone to sea.

5 May. Orders by Pembroke to Sir John Munden.

News has come from Spain that about 2,000 men are designed for the West Indies, and with the Duke of Albequerke, who has been appointed Vice-King of Mexico, who was expected at Corunna on 8 May (N.S.), but that on 29 April, though the men were ready there, the eight or nine ships to convoy or take them were not.
These vessels were "suddenly" expected from France. It is desirable to intercept or destroy these ships in the harbour.
You are to take eight third-rate ships, the most suitable you can find at Spithead, two fireships and the yacht that attends the Commissioner of the Navy at Portsmouth, borrow men from other ships to man these vessels, have them furnished with all necessary stores and provisions, and, so soon as the weather serves, to go to such place off Corunna as may enable you to send in and find out what is going on there. If you find these ships still at Corunna or thereabouts, you are to do your best to take or destroy them. Having done your best against them, you are to return and cruise in the Soundings, awaiting further orders; and you are to send in to Plymouth an account of your service. If you find, on getting to Corunna, that these ships are not there, you are to cruise on and off between Cape Finisterre and Corunna, so as to be best able to intercept these vessels on their way to Corunna, or on the way thence to the West Indies.
Conceal your ships and intention as far as possible; and continue your cruise there so long as you have any prospect of doing any service as aforesaid, or till further orders. If, on going to Corunna, you find that these ships have gone, and gone too far to give you a chance of overhauling them, you are to bring your fleet back to the Soundings and cruise there for the protection of the trade of her Majesty's subjects and of her Allies, sending in a report on your actions and describing the place where you will cruise.
While so cruising do your utmost to protect her Majesty's and her Allies' ships, and take, burn, &c., those of France and Spain.

A. John Sansome, Secretary to the Commissioners of Customs, to ———.

The Commissioners, having received the enclosed order for seizing the ships and goods of the Spanish and French Kings' subjects, and all mariners of the said Kings, immediately employed one of their officers on the river to do so, so far as it might appertain to the officers of the Customs. The officer's return is enclosed, showing that there were several mariners in the three ships which he seized. The Commissioners have no power to detain men and suppose it is in the power of the Lord High Admiral to do so. They desire direction in the matter.

Having received from Mr. Sansome, junr., a copy of the Queen's Order in Council, I seized the St. Joseph, J. B. Marossa master, bound to Ostend, and the St. Jacob, Alderon Deross master, bound to Bridges [Bruges], both belonging to the Spanish Netherlands and laden with bale goods, tobacco, sugar &c.; also the St. Tannando, Thomas Sampson master, with "auranges," wine and olives, bound inward from Sevill. [Same.] Seafield's Memorial to the Queen.

It is humbly represented to your Majesty that the Parliament of Scotland addressed the late King and represented that it was contrary to the privileges of the Kingdom of Scotland to impress there seamen from on board Scots' ships. Accordingly the King appointed the Lord High Admiral to grant protections to all such Scottish ships, and the men on board them, as should have certificates from the Secretaries of State, and ever since that time the Secretaries have given certificates and the Lord High Admiral has granted protections, and the aforesaid Order of Council has been duly observed, and commerce between the two nations has been continued. But, there being four ships now in the river belonging to Scotland, and manned by Scotsmen holding the Lord High Admiral's protection, the whole crews of some of them and some of the crews of the others were yesterday imprest, which is an injury to the merchants and a manifest contempt of authority.

It is desired that the Queen will in Council give orders for their liberation and to prevent such disorders for the future.

I hear that the merchants trading to Barbados will to-night present a memorial at the Privy Council asking for a convoy for their ships coming thence, which are now laden and ready to come. I can think of no other course for their protection than that the ships cruising in the Soundings be ordered to look out for them and bring them in, unless Vice-Admiral Benbow, when the ships now going to Jamaica join him, is able to detach one to convoy them. I will give him a conditional authority to do this.

[8 May.] Petition of Mary Vernon to the Queen, showing that:

Petitioner, being very young and consumptive, in the year 1686 went to France for her health, on the advice of her physicians. In 1686 her father died, leaving his estate in Ireland much encumbered, and petitioner was forced to continue in France for a maintenance, which she received from a charitable relative till lately.

Though petitioner was never in Ireland, she was in 1697 outlawed there for high treason. All such outlawries were afterwards by an Act of the Irish Parliament made irreversible, and not pardonable by the Crown.

Petitioner's estate, to which she is entitled, is, by the late Act of Resumption of the Irish forfeitures, vested in trustees to be sold. Petitioner was wholly ignorant of the proper method of proceeding, and that it was her duty to make her first address to your Majesty for relief. She was advised to apply to the House of Commons for a Bill to reverse the outlawry and enable her to claim her estate, which is accordingly passed there.

Prays for pardon for having taken this course, which she took through want of good advice and not of duty, and for the Queen's assent to the said Bill, and recommendation thereof to the House of Peers.

In the Lord High Admiral’s absence I opened and read your letter. Sir John Munden has been ordered (by express sent last night) to sail with second rates if he can have them quicker than thirds, or with five third rates if he can at once get so many together. He is to wait for no further provisions if he has two months’ supply at full allowance: and probably the ships have much more than this. His orders were peremptory, and I hope his next will report him ready to sail.

They stayed at Nevis one night. The French fleet was supposed to be about Martinico and said to be 40 sail.

Josiah Burchett to William Aglionby.

Captain Spann, commander of H.M.S. the Sorlings, has been at the western ports and in Ireland, in an endeavour to get men for the fleet, and sends me a letter of which I enclose an extract.

A. Extract as mentioned.

I applied to the Lords Justices of Ireland and the Lord Mayor of Dublin as enclosed [missing] show. There were 600 or 700 seamen in and about Dublin, and half of these would have sufficed for the trade of the place; yet neither myself nor my officers were to impress a seaman on shore on pain of imprisonment, arraignment, and being condemned to death, as Secretary Davison told my lieutenant. I am told that the lawyers and judges of Dublin have advised that the Lord High Admiral of England has no power to impress men in Ireland. If so, with submission, English seamen may evade the obligation to serve by merely stepping over to Ireland. This is done, and a proof of it is that, at Cork, I took a man out of a gentleman's pleasure-boat that actually belonged to the Royal William. He had a ticket of leave from Admiral Churchill, which had expired. I have him and his ticket. I am credibly informed that there are at Cork 300, at Waterford 300, and Youghal 200, at Kinsale 150, and in Dublin 700 deserters from the Royal Navy. They serve in the merchant service for less pay than the Queen allows, 1702.

Notwithstanding the attitude of the Irish Government, I have procured 65 good English sailors to serve in her Majesty's fleet under Admiral Hopson. I have been much threatened by the Secretary (in Ireland), but never impress a man without first letting the Government or chief magistrate know.

8 May. Admiralty Office.

Pembroke to Nottingham.

I have yours of the 5th enclosing extract of one from Brigadier Selwyn, Governor of Jamaica. In these he shows his uneasiness at two points gained, as he says, by Vice-Admiral Benbow from the Commissioners of the Admiralty before he left. They are:—

1. Obliging such vessels as are commissioned by the Governor to make a distinction in their colours.

2. A permission to the Vice-Admiral to press (with the consent of the Governor) seamen and landsmen that have served at sea.

The first of these points was fully considered by the Admiralty on a report from the Council of Trade and Plantations, dated 9 July, 1701. After consideration, the Admiralty proposed to their Excellencies that ships commissioned by Governors abroad ought to be allowed to wear Jacks to distinguish them from private ships, but should have, on the Jack, a mark to distinguish them from the Royal Navy. This resolution, and a draft of such a Jack, were approved by their Excellencies in Council of 31 July, 1701. I cannot see what hardship it entails on privateers there, or on those fitted out from here, which must be distinguished from the ships of war.

The other point arose from frequent complaints by Sir William Beeston, late Governor of Jamaica, and was settled before Governor Selwyn left England, and approved by him. Vice-Admiral Benbow has now to have the Governor's assent before he presses men, which was, in former times, not required. As pressing men in ships or on shore in the harbour of Jamaica is strictly against his instructions, it is probable that he has had to press them to take the place of sick or dead men. I will specially urge on him in my next that neither the people on shore may suffer nor the public service by discouragement given to the privateers by taking their men. It may also be well to write to the Governor to assist the Flag Officer with men for his squadron, at all events when there shall be occasion, lest that part of the service under his care should suffer.

I agree with the Governor that it would be a very good thing if recruits for the squadron at Jamaica could be sent out by merchant ships trading there; but the need of men for home defence and for service elsewhere makes it very unlikely that we shall be able to do this.

I have received yours of the 2nd (re declaration of war) and accordingly by beat of drum gave notice to all French merchants and masters of vessels to leave after despatching their affairs with the inhabitants. The Orford and Essex arrived to-day with news of the declaration and bringing nine companies to relieve the force here. They are very thin at present and without arms. When coming in, the Orford took a 20 ton French vessel with brandy and rosin, which, the magistrates tell me, has been formerly prohibited, and restitution made, though in time of war. I humbly wish you success in your office.

ROGER PINCKNEY to HEDGES.

About two years since, at Exeter City Sessions, before Sir Edward Seymour, Bart., Recorder, Edmund Diston, alias Cox, and Peter Dyer, were tried and convicted, one of them for robbery and the other for burglary, and were sentenced to death. However, on some circumstances offered on their trials, Sir Edward reprieved them till further order; and they petitioned the King for a pardon. King William referred the case to Sir Edward, who, I am told, made a report in favour of them, but those papers are mislaid. They pray for a warrant that they may be inserted in the next Western Circuit pardon, else they must inevitably perish in jail.

Latest date, PETITION of HENRY BLAND and SAMUEL HOLDEN, Merchants, shewing that:—

Petitioners had resided at Narva for some time before that city was besieged by the Czar of Moscovia in 1700. During the said siege petitioners landed a quantity of English manufactures in the river of Narva, having first obtained leave from the King of Sweden to pass with the said goods into Moscovia. The King of Sweden, however, having attacked the Moscovia camp and raised the siege, all the petitioners' said goods were, after being carried into petitioners' own warehouse in the city of Narva, seized by the Swedes. A quantity of cloth and kersies, to the value of about 600l. sterling, was actually taken from them by force.

However, on a letter from his late Majesty, the King of Sweden caused justice to be done to petitioners, granting them an allowance out of the Customs on such goods as they should import into the city of Narva. By letters dated 2 May, 1702 [copy annexed], the General Customs Office at Stockholm gave orders accordingly to the Customs House at Narva.

Nevertheless petitioners have not been paid, and have long waited for payment.*

They pray for an order to the English Minister at Stockholm

* So this petition must be later than May, 1702. It is placed here, as this is the latest date in it.

The Queen's Letter to the Parliament of Scotland.

After the great loss which these nations and all Europe have sustained by the death of our dear brother, we were much encouraged "upon our entering into the administration of the Government" by the hope of having your continued fidelity, of which you gave "so signal proofs in the reign of our glorious predecessor."

We wish greatly that we could have met you in person "that from our own mouth we might have given our own people full assurance of our sincere intentions towards their true welfare and happiness"; but, being prevented by the multiplicity of important affairs, we would not delay your meeting any longer.

"And that nothing may be wanting on our part for the satisfaction of our subjects, whose affection we shall always look upon as our greatest security, and value above all other advantages, we give you full assurance that we are firmly resolved to maintain and protect them in the full possession of their religion, laws and liberties and of the Presbyterian government of the Church as at present established.

"It pleased God to make the late King the great instrument of delivering our people from Popery and arbitrary power and of restoring to them their ancient rights and privileges, and, through the same Divine Grace, we shall through the whole course of our reign aim at nothing more than the preserving to them these advantages, and contribute as much as in us lies for their further security in the enjoyment of them.

"The exorbitant power of the French King threatening the liberties of all Europe, and his owning the pretended Prince of Wales as King of these our dominions, influencing also Spain to concur with him in that indignity, tending visibly to the subversion of the Protestant religion and to the ruin of our subjects in all that is dear to them, have obliged us, in pursuance of an express article of the Treaty entered into by the late King and our Allies, to declare war in this as well as our other dominions against France and Spain." We expect your concurrence, not doubting but you are affected with the same sense of those wrongs and indignities and the other just causes of war as appeared in the many loyal addresses presented by our subjects on the declaration of war.

We therefore earnestly recommend to you the providing of competent supplies for the war and the provision of sufficient forces to support the settlement which you now enjoy.

"The late King did before his death very earnestly recommend to his Parliament of England the consideration of the Union of the two kingdoms of Scotland and England, which being so necessary for the security and happiness of both, we did at our accession to the Crown again seriously recommend the same to them; and they having proceeded to empower us by an Act of Parliament to name Commissioners to treat of an Union, we doubt not but you will do what is necessary on your part; and we shall contribute our utmost endeavours towards the accomplishment thereof and shall esteem it our happiness to establish the nation upon so sure a foundation."

We have appointed the Duke of Queensberry to be our Commissioner and represent us during the sitting of our Parliament, knowing his ability, which you also know. We have empowered him to give our consent to such laws as you pass for your security, civil and religious. We desire you to give him entire trust and credit. "It will be very satisfying to us that effectual methods be taken for promoting religion, virtue and true piety and suppressing vice and immorality, for advancing and encouraging trade and for employing and providing for the poor." Being now in the beginning of our reign we have recommended nothing but what is for the security and happiness of Scotland. We hope you will despatch with unanimity what comes before you. "And we expect, by your prudence and conduct, this session of Parliament shall be brought to such a happy conclusion as shall lay the foundation of that firm union and true understanding between us and our people as is necessary for the happiness of both."

A. Extract as mentioned above.

We have had information that M. Cotelogon, who commanded the French squadron at the Havanna, has joined Chattereno (Chateau-Regnaud) at Martenico and are put to sea. The inhabitants of Barbados are in great apprehension of his coming there. If a war comes, nothing here can stand against him, for he has 40 sail of as good ships as there are in France. I cannot go there "unless I take this island in a tow." If he comes here we will give him the best reception we can. The country here has given us possession of two merchant ships to act as fire ships.

They have not attempted anything to windward.

I got yours of 2 May, re impending declaration of war, on the 7th. I took steps to publish the news and to tell the masters of French boats and barques to go away at once, or they would be made prisoners of war. [Details.] On the 9th, Captain Norris arrived on H.M.S. Orford with five companies of Colonel Mordaunt's new-raised regiment, and with the actual Declaration. I put it in force at once, and seized three barques and two shallops for the Queen, and imprisoned the masters and all the men (27) pending further orders. I have ordered 10d. a day to the masters and 5d. a day to the men for their maintenance. Please send me orders in the matter.

A French gentleman having some trouble in his country has lived here three years and cannot return till his affairs are settled, which, now war has begun, he despairs of. He is a Protestant, well born, and hates the King of France's actions; but will not be known for fear of being ruined. Other details.

Our boats at St. Malo were stopped on the 5th and set free on the 10th. The masters and passengers say that they did not know war had been proclaimed, but knew it was unavoidable; so the merchants of the town, having some 100 sail in Newfoundland, have fitted out two ships to go there and bring them news of the declaration. Our boats were held up till these two ships had got away, lest we should have news of their going; but arrived last night. The merchants at St. Malo fear a bombardment, and some of them have removed their goods. A strong guard is kept on the coast and there is a camp at La Hougue, near Cherbourg, with 15,000 horse, foot and dragoons. Privateers are being fitted out at St. Malo, and some of them are ready to go to sea.

I am the adventurer of four vessels of above 100 tons burden employed between this place and Rotterdam. They are much used and thought to have done more than was ever done before for the commerce of the two nations. The Lord High Admiral in his last general orders for impressing seamen to man the fleet excepted them particularly from being disturbed thereby.

Nevertheless the service thereby intended for transporting the officers of the army now going abroad, and for other conveniences to her Majesty's subjects trading to Holland, is prevented, and myself nearly ruined, by the expense I am at by reason of the present embargo, in keeping the companies of these vessels in enforced idleness. Pray relieve me of this burden. I was in hopes it might have been taken off before this, so did not trouble your lordship before.

MEMORIAL to the LORDS of the COMMITTEE of COUNCIL.

We, Samuel Atkinson and Nicholas Roope, appointed [Commissioners] for transportation of the Queen’s forces in obedience to the Queen’s command, report that:

In pursuance to the Lord High Admiral’s order of 3 March last, we have hired 5,000 tons of shipping to carry 5,000 land soldiers with the fleet, and have provided bedding and accommodation for the men.

On 2 April his Excellency signified to us that the Commissioners of Victualling were ordered to put provisions for 3,000 men aboard 2,500 tons of shipping, and that the ships, when victualled, were to go to Spithead and await orders.

On 25 April, the said provisions being on board, we gave the masters of the said 2,500 tons of shipping (seven ships) orders to go to Spithead at once.

The remaining ships, we think, will be ready to sail in three or four days.

By order of the late Lords of the Treasury, we have taken up 1,000 more tons of shipping for the aforesaid service, which will be ready to proceed in a day or two afterwards.

On Friday last we informed the Commissioners of Victualling of our taking ships to carry 420 horses [details], and shall have them provisioned (hay excepted) by Friday next. Hay is being pressed night and day.

12 May. Memorandum of a Council of War.

On board the Russell at sea.

The service for which the squadron was designed was communicated to all. It was unanimously resolved that to go into the Groyne with the squadron was impracticable, “we being all strangers to the going in, as also to the formidable strength of the place, there being foul ground and but a narrow entrance, as appears by the Waggoner, and that if the squadron could get in there was no appearance of coming out again, . . . but with different winds”; especially with so many ships. Such an attempt, instead of being an advantage, would probably result in the loss of so considerable a squadron.

However, that the expected service might be most conveniently executed, it is thought best to lie with the squadron so as not to be discovered 15 leagues north-west from Cape Prior, the eastern-most cape at the entrance of the Groyne, to send in a small frigate and smack to see if the ships are there; if they are, to wait for them and intercept them as they come out, but if not then to cruise off Cape Prior so as to intercept the men-of-war expected from France. If it turns out that the ships have gone, then to go to the other station according to orders.

You are further to take care that the great ships at Portsmouth and Spithead, except the Royal William and St. George, which must be manned, be brought into harbour, leaving on board each a proper number of men.

The rest of the men are to be put for the present into other ships not designed for the expedition, that they may be in condition for service. The seamen are to be assured of being restored to their respective ships.

Sworn before John Ellis, they say that:—

About 18 April, they were with Mr. Nicholas Wostenholme at the Bell at Edmonton*, kept by one John Calvert. Among other discourse Mr. Pott said, "We have now a lawful and rightful Queen of our own country, King James' daughter, and I like her the better and thank God for her." Mr. Wostenholme then said he did not know whether she was King James' daughter or not, but, if she was, he liked her the worse. Erasmus Norris, of Edmonton, Mr. Robert Harvey and a Mr. Dove were present.

Some time since, when the Perrigine galley was in Rotterdam with Lord Carmarthen, Mr.* Chandelor Billingsly, an officer belonging to the said ship, in his lordship's absence, fired at a French ship to make her strike. For this he was confined, and has since been out of employment, for though the late King set him at liberty, the then Board of Admiralty did not receive any order to restore him to a command.

Lord Carmarthen has now sent me a letter in which the Pensioner of Rotterdam expresses the willingness of the magistrates of the City to pass by Billingsly's indiscretion. I send you the letter and desire her Majesty's commands on it.

Nottingham's Letters.

1. To the Earl of Romney.

Queen's command:—Her Majesty having heard of the condition of Portland Castle, directs you to send down some powder there forthwith and do what else you think best in the case.

Extract from Mr. Charles Langrish's letter, dated Weymouth, 2 May, 1702.

Portland Castle is in a very dangerous condition and will be totally rifled unless some special care be taken by appointing some fit person to look after the same. There is not a grain of powder in the Castle and the gunner, being very necessitous, was forced the Sunday before to quit the Castle and shift for himself. He has left in possession of the sutler's office that is in the Castle yard a miserable poor fellow that sweeps chimneys for his living, and two porters, as so rated in pay, but [these] live not in the Castle; which is the only garrison. Although the said Mr. Langrish has the keys of the Castle, yet the windows are open so that any person may get in and cut away the leads that cover it, which will certainly be done if timely care be not taken, "as Weymouth Castle by neglect was demolished." Portland Castle is of good use and security to ships that come into Portland Road, and the only defence which the island hath.

Queen's command:—To send orders for freeing them from that obligation, which keeps them from the proper discharge of their other duties.

Bernard Ellis to Lord Secretary Nottingham.

Corroborates Colonel Collier's information of the 12th, q.v. The English ships from St. Malo will pay large duties, being bound for Southampton with wine and Morlaix cloth. When they arrived there were six French boats freighted on the sole risk of merchants here, which they offered to confirm on oath. On this assurance I said I would do what I could to protect them and let them return and gave them a guard to save them from attempted plunder, by men-o-war's men, in the harbour here.

Since getting her Majesty's order of 2 May to the Commissioners of Customs empowering them to seize and detain all French and Spanish ships and cargoes, I have had no more to do with them. I send copies of the French King's orders to M. Pontchartrain and the Commissioner of St. Malo's letters to me.

Josiah Burchett to William Aclionby.

Sir George Rooke asks how the French prisoners on board the ships at the Nore are to be disposed of. Pray move the Principal Secretary of State for orders to the Governor of Sheerness to receive them, if it is not done already.

Orders were lately sent to the Nore for supplying from the ships there 50 men, the better to enable the transport ships to sail from the river. Sir G. Rooke, meeting with this order at his arrival at the Nore, has acquainted his Excellency that the complying with it will unman one of the ships, for which reason, and the want of men for the ships necessary for the intended expedition, he proposes discharging the transports for the 1,000 men last ordered and placing them among the fire-ships, bomb-vessels, store-ships, victuallers and tenders. The Lord High

Admiral desires the Queen's commands in this matter. When this matter of transports for the additional 1,000 men was first mooted, it was thought by some that the additional men might be accommodated in the fleet.

In answer to a letter from Lord Nottingham—two vessels have been appointed to cruise on the coasts of Kent and Sussex to prevent intelligence to France, namely the Despatch and Fly, brigantines. They cruise between Arundel and Hastings, and Hastings and Dover.

Mr. Hugk has given me a memorial demanding arrears for the King of Denmark by commission, as he says, from that Court. I send you a copy of the account and ask you how the matter stands, as you were formerly well acquainted with it. I send you, as a matter pertaining to the Army, the Mayor of Dover's account for expenses incurred in connexion with deserters. Please procure him satisfaction.

Petition to the Queen of William Viscount Montgomery,

Having received a licence, dated 25 Dec., 1688, from the late King (when Prince of Orange) to travel beyond sea, petitioner soon after went into France. Recites the provisions of the Act of 1697, making it high treason in certain cases to return from France without leave from the King or Queen. Proceeds:— Petitioner in obedience to the said Act, though not directly included in the same by reason of the licence aforesaid, retired with his family into Spanish Flanders. He has lived there above four years to the great prejudice of his private concerns and the undoing of his creditors; for, at this distance, he cannot by sale of part of his estate or otherwise raise money to pay his debts.

Prays for licence to return to the Queen's dominions.

P. ¾. Signed. Endd. with order dated at Whitehall, 11 May, 1702, referring the petition to the Attorney General for consideration and report. S.P. Dom., Anne 1, 32, followed by:—

Report of Sir Edward Northey, Attorney General, on the foregoing petition.

Recites the facts. Adds:—After going into France under the licence of 1688 the petitioner at some time, but I do not know when, returned into England. On 27 May, 1696, he was at the sessions of Oyer and Terminer for the City of London indicted for high treason for adhering to the French King then at war with the late King and Queen, and endeavouring to procure the French King to invade England.

The petitioner absconded by reason of the indictment till 15 December, 1696, when, to prevent his being returned outlawed, he rendered himself and was imprisoned at Newgate. He pressed for trial, but on affidavit that Cardell Goodman, one of the witnesses against him, was gone beyond seas, his trial was deferred; and therefore on 19 June, 1697, he was bailed out of Newgate. At several later sessions he moved the sessions to be tried on the said indictment, but was refused, as Goodman was still beyond sea.

Recites the provisions of the Act of 1697, requiring all persons who had gone to France &c. to leave the kingdom by 1 February, 1697–8, unless licensed to stay by the King, and forbidding their return without licence.

Proceeds:—Thereupon petitioner prepared to go, and went, beyond sea. I think he was bound to do this, as the King's licence given to him to go beyond seas was not "a licence within the intent of that Act to go into France." The King's Attorney being not then ready to try him, his bail was discharged, but the indictment remains against him, and is an objection to any persons buying any part of his estate which he may wish to sell to pay his debts.

The Act of Parliament is the only thing which prevents his returning, and "I am humbly of opinion that it will not be prejudicial to your Majesty or the public," if you grant your licence to him to return, he giving security as your Majesty shall direct for faithful behaviour.

It is desired that the ships, which will also bring supplies for the city of London, be allowed to come there.

Desires that orders for receiving sick and wounded French and Spanish prisoners, pending exchange, may be sent to the civil magistrates at Dover, Southampton, Plymouth, Dartmouth and Falmouth. Such orders have already been sent to the Governors of garrisons on the coast. The Governors and civil magistrates should be ordered to send an account to the Navy Board from time to time of what men are sent to them, whereon allowance will be made for their support as in the last war.

The Council was held as in margin. Present:—Sir John Munden, Rear-Admiral of the Red, Captains Sincock, Price, Townsend, Fairfax, Elwes, Walker, Wakelin, Barker, Keck and Balchin.*

On inquiry made, only two persons were able to give an account of the strength of the Groyne. Lieutenant John Babb, 3rd lieutenant of the Ipswich, who lived there eight months, said:—

* Also spelt "Balchen." 1702.

The entry is narrow and foul ground on both sides.

There is a very strong castle at the entrance on the starboard side, with near 100 guns upon a rock, and platforms between Hercules' Pillars and that castle.

On the larboard side is a mud fort with 20 guns, and on the same side a platform near the church, which commands the harbour; at the easternmost part of the town is a strong citadel, which commands every angle of the harbour.

Different winds are required for going in and coming out, in so much that the packet-boats have often to warp out.

Gilbert Dobson, midshipman on the Restoration, has been a pilot with Biscayers and Portuguese for three years or more during the late war. He knows the harbours thereabouts well, and says that:—

The going in is difficult. It is three cables over (across) with foul ground on both sides. In the Sound without there is foul ground, and dangerous to anchor there, it being deep water. Corroborates Babb as to the forts and difficulties of wind. Proceeds:—Guns are mounted on the town walls. When Dobson was last there a French Governor with officers and soldiers were there and possessed of the fortifications, and were adding to them by mounting more guns.

On these reports being considered, it was unanimously resolved that to sail into the Groyne would be to expose the fleet to certain loss without service to the nation, or injury to the enemy.

As the Dolphin and Salisbury, sent in to look at the Groyne and get information, have not returned, and as Sir J. Munden has waited in vain for them at the rendezvous (off Cape Prior) it is thought advisable to sail to the rendezvous off Cape Finisterre in hopes to find them there or get information otherwise.

ROYAL WARRANT TO THE LORD LIEUTENANT OF IRELAND AND TO THE PAYMASTER-GENERAL AND MUSTER-MASTER-GENERAL THERE.

The late King by warrant dated at Kingston on 19 February last directed that the several regiments of foot then in the army of Ireland should be augmented in their number by recruiting each company of each regiment to two sergeants, three corporals, two drums and fifty privates (servants included), and by adding two companies to each regiment so that each should consist of twelve companies. By our warrant of 13 March last we ordered (sets out the terms of the warrant, for which see above, p. 5). In order that the two new regiments and newly raised companies be paid as well as the others, we direct you to add all of them to the military establishment of Ireland, and that they be paid as the rest of the army there are paid under the establishment of 1 August, 1701.

Further you shall cause the Muster-Master to muster all the regiments of foot that are to remain in Ireland on the first day of June next and, in case they shall then appear full and complete, to allow them the prescribed pay from 1 March last. 20 May. ROYAL WARRANT to the LORD LIEUTENANT and CHIEF GOVERNOR OF IRELAND.

We have directed that levy-money be paid to the officers appointed to raise two new companies which are to be added to each of the five regiments in Ireland designed for our service at sea this summer; and by our letters of 28 March last we directed you to give orders to the Muster-Master-General to cause those other regiments in Ireland that were not to serve at sea to be mustered on 1 July, with this direction—that if at that date they should be found complete in all respects he should close the rolls as such from 1 April, and allow them such whole musters, the better to enable the officers to make their levies and recruits; but if any of the companies should be found defective on the said 1 July, the Muster-Master should respite not only the men who were wanting but also all other men who had been raised for that company. On further consideration we find it much more convenient for our service to allow to such regiments the like levy-money as we give to the regiments that are to serve at sea.

We therefore order that our directions of 28 March last (mentioned above) be not carried out. Instead, issue the necessary orders to the Paymaster-General to pay 40s. for every private sentinel taken in to fill up the said regiments and for the two new companies to be added to each of the said five regiments (servants excluded), provided the said regiments shall appear and muster full by the first day of June next. In case they shall not so appear full and complete at that time, the levy-moneys so advanced shall be proportionately deducted from the pay of such officers as shall not have their companies complete.

NOTTINGHAM to the LORD MAYOR [of London].

I have considered the depositions against James Clifton and examined him as closely as I could and laid the matter before the Lords of the Committee of Council. They think there is not enough evidence to detain him as a prisoner. If therefore you have no other charge against him, take order for his release.

20 May. Pembroke to NOTTINGHAM.

Sends a memorial and asks that it be communicated as soon as possible.

Five lines. Signed. Endd. S.P. Dom., Naval 6, 82. Enclosing:
A. Memorial for the Queen in Council.

It has been decided to divide the fleet into two parts, and that part which is designed abroad will proceed so far as to leave the greatest naval strength of France on this side of them. This is quite different from what it was in the last war, when the Earl of Orford proceeded into the Straits with the major part of the fleet; for then the greatest naval force of France was at Toulon and the English and Dutch between England and them.

I therefore propose to the Queen that steps be taken to hasten the States General to send (1) their twenty-one ships designed for the expedition, (2) the other nine of their forty-eight sail for the line of battle and at least half of their eighteen according to the agreement in that behalf, as, pending their arrival, the part of the fleet designed for service abroad cannot be sent off without danger to the trade and coasts within the Channel.

20 May. Report by Pembroke.

I have considered the petition of the Royal African Co. referred to me by the Queen. It sets out that the French Guinea Company have made a contract at Madrid for supplying the Spanish West Indies with negroes, in which they are very much supported and encouraged by the French King. The African Company have heard that three French men-of-war were cruising early in the year off the south part of Africa. The petitioners say that they have forts on that coast which cannot be supported but by frequent supplies of men and stores, "and are of absolute necessity for the preservation of the trade of those parts to her Majesty's subjects and supplying her Majesty's plantations with negroes"; and that they have therefore fitted out the ships in the annexed list, which cannot sail owing to the war with France and Spain. They therefore pray that in place of the Bonadventure, which is now ready to return home from the south parts of Africa, the Queen will spare them some frigates to cruise on the African coast and protect the Queen's subjects and their trade, and that these ships may go out as a guard to the others in their list.

I report that the Bonadventure will "suddenly" be coming home, and a fourth rate and fifth rate will then be left on other parts of that coast. It is of great importance to the trade of England in those parts that their ships should proceed, and the trade would be much encouraged if a fourth rate could be spared to go there. I cannot find that any ships of war were allowed them in the last war, but no doubt if the French mean to supplant them in their trade for negroes they will have ships of war there for the purpose. But foreign services have already taken up so many cruising frigates that there are not left at home a sufficient number to answer the many pressing services which daily call for them.

JOSIAH BURCHETT to WILLIAM AGLIONBY.

The Lord High Admiral has sent a ship to Falmouth to bring the two packet-boats to Plymouth, where they are to be fitted for the service of the fleet. Pray have orders sent to the Postmasters-General to direct their being handed over to the captain of that vessel, who is advised to give a receipt for them to the Customs officer at Falmouth.

21 May.
Admiralty Office.

SAME to SAME.

I have yours with the duplicates of letters of my Lord Secretary Nottingham to the Governors of the Plantations.

I thought my Lord had no other duplicates to send but those to Jamaica. I will send these despatches to the Commander-in-Chief of the two ships going there with orders to him to take special care of them; but I do not know how to contrive to send on the letters to Barbados, New England, Virginia, Pennsylvania, the Leeward Islands, Carolina, and Bermuda. The vessel that carried the originals to the Continent (which were all forwarded from Virginia) sailed some time before I knew of his lordship’s intention to send duplicates. I at present can find no other vessel to take charge of them, but I can if desired send those to Barbados and the Leeward Islands to Vice-Admiral Benbow, with orders to him to forward them. If the vessel which Mr. Randolph lately proposed to send is permitted to sail, she may take the letters to Virginia and elsewhere on the Continent. The Governor of Virginia will send them on. The vessel may also touch at Bermuda and deliver there the letters addressed there and to Rhode Island. I believe the master of the vessel will take this upon him in consideration of being allowed to sail. Details. I desire directions.

The packet to the commander of the Newfoundland convoy I will send off to-night. I find the merchants very uneasy at being thus long embargoed, which prevents their repairing to the western ports and awaiting the convoy there. "Nor do I find them under less difficulty how to dispose of their fish when their vessels are laden, in regard of the dangers they will be exposed to should they go up the Streights," and the little advantage they will get if they sell their fish in Portugal. It is difficult to know how to instruct the Commander-in-Chief of the convoy in the matter.

Says that he was an ensign in the Duke of Norfolk's regiment and was pricked down for a captain in Colonel Skelton's regiment, but his commission was not taken out. He does not know the hand in which a letter which Secretary Hedges showed him was written, nor the hand in which it was addressed to Captain Lewis Conyers at the Rose Coffee House, Convent Garden. He owns that on Friday last he was at the Dog at Richmond, going down thither by water with Captain and Mrs. Murray and Mr. Conyers.
The rest of the company he did not know, except Mr. John Wiche.
The names of the rest were Mr. Auburn, Mr. Tudor, Mr. Projers, Major Wythe and Mr. Townsend. After dinner they drank the Queen's health and prosperity to her armies by sea and land.
Asked what he meant by an expression in his letter to Secretary Hedges saying that he had an affair in hand which his imprisonment would greatly prejudice, he says it referred to the fact that, having lately married, he has a lawsuit depending in the Court of Chancery with his wife's trustees and guardians for her fortune.

P.S.—He further says that he knows of no design against the Queen or her government, and declares on his honour that if he did he would disclose it. Hearing that there was a warrant against him he came down to both the Secretaries' offices to surrender the day before he was taken.

In all pp. 1$. The deposition and p.s. signed, and the p.s.
countersigned by John Ellis. Endd. S.P. Dom., Anne 1, 34.

21 May. Deposition of Lewis Conyers, of "Convent Garden," Gentleman.

Was never an officer in any army. Does not know the hand of the letter or of the address of the letter shown him (&c. as in preceding deposition). Proceeds:—The meeting at the Dog at Richmond was an accidental meeting for diversion and not for business. Believes that the information given against him to the Secretary of State on which he was "taken up," was given by malicious people for the putting off a trial in Doctors' Commons, where his presence was requisite, and the deferring whereof will greatly damage him.

P.S.—The examinate knows of no design against the Queen or her government; and says on his honour that if he did he would disclose it.

In all pp. 1$. The deposition and p.s. signed, and the p.s. countersigned by John Ellis. Ibid, 35.

Josiah Burchett to William Aglionby.

I send an extract from Vice-Admiral Hopson re pressing men. The Vice-Admiral adds that the officers of the Customs are ready to co-operate in the getting of men if they have orders. Please communicate this to Lord Secretary Nottingham.

Extract as mentioned in foregoing.

The officers who lately went hence to press men at Chichester, Brighthelmston and Shoreham are returned without having pressed any, for as soon as they heard of the officers coming, they fled into the woods and are in such bodies there that no county gang dares attack them.

Nottingham's Letters.

1. To Mr. Harcourt.

Your report concerning the murder committed in Mayfair was laid before the Queen in Council. I hear that two of the persons concerned in the riot are since taken. If so they will probably discover the rest. The justices should examine them and give me a further report for the Queen, whose directions for further action I will then receive.

2. To Josiah Burchett.

Mr. John Baker, of London, merchant, says that he has the disposal of the Charles galley of Bristol, now there, and that the galley is ready to sail and will take any express to Jamaica or Barbados without other reward than the Queen's permission and protection. The Queen is inclined to this method rather than to sending an advice-boat at her own charge. [Details.]

Direct Baker to have the ship made ready at once, and that the Queen will release the embargo on the vessel on Sunday next, he undertaking to deliver the packets with care and speed.

3. To the Postmasters General.

Queen's command:—That the packet-boats that used to go to Corunna go to Lisbon and so continue till further order; and that you write to some proper correspondent of the Post Office in France to know of the Postmaster General whether if we continue to send the packet-boats as usual to Calais they will continue the intercourse on their side as formerly.

Nottingham to the Lord High Treasurer.

I have received an account from the Admiralty of the great difficulties the press-masters have in trying to press seamen, especially in Sussex, where the men fly into the woods "and gather themselves into bodies able to resist the country." The Vice-Admiral of that Coast represents that the Customs officers at Brighthamsted and Shoreham are ready to help in pressing men if they have orders for that purpose.

Queen's command:—To give orders to the Customs officers for this purpose.

Entry on the Proposals of William Plowman.

Plowman "with a deep sense of his duty to her Majesty at this present juncture, when the French expect to render themselves absolute masters of the Mediterranean seas," makes the following proposals:

To build a galley of a new invention at his own expense, burthen 320 tons, 26 guns, 120 seamen and 40 marines, to row with 20 oars, which in the Mediterranean, when calms frequently happen, is necessary. Plowman, "by a long experience of the Streights,"* did act so vigorously in opposition to the French designs in the last war by destroying 13 of their vessels and annoying the enemy in the Levant and their passage to Turkey,

* Used here for the whole Mediterranean Sea.
where they have a large trade, that they have "on all occasions persecuted him with implacable hatred as the only private man that attempted doing them such considerable damage."

He asks that the Queen will accept of the said galley into her immediate service, and victual and man the same, to be employed upon any despatch into the Mediterranean. She will be of great service to the fleet there and constantly get intelligence of the enemy's motions and designs, being a fit vessel to serve with despatches on all occasions. He begs that instead of any hire, he may have what prizes he takes after deduction of \( \frac{1}{10} \), he allowing the usual shares to mariners and officers as appointed by law.

By the arbitrary proceedings of the Great Duke of Tuscany, at instigation of the French, he was detained 32 months in a dungeon at Florence, and his estate seized and given to the French, "so contrary to the laws of nations that her Majesty has demanded satisfaction and reparation of damages." Plowman prays for a further opportunity to do the Queen and his country service, "for besides the advantage to the nation in general it will be of no small moment to let the Italians, Turks, Algarines, and Barbarians see that where the French think themselves secure and safe we can, with a small expense, spoil their tranquillity even in sight of their own ports."

Order, 25 May, Whitehall. Referred to the Lord High Admiral (Prince George of Denmark)* for consideration and report. Further pleasure.

EXAMINATION of FRANCIS LAWRENCE† taken before Daniel Smith and Simon Sandford.

Deponent is commander of a privateer smack the St. Barb, about 15 tons, of Dunkirk. Sworn, he says:—

Born in Westbury parish, Gloucestershire. Lived in Bristol till 1684. In 1686 went to Dunkirk, and has since lived there. In 1688 his wife and family came over and joined him at Dunkirk. After the declaration of war between England and France on 15 May, 1702 (English style), he received letters of marte or reprisal from the French King and to take the ships and goods of the King's enemies under Seal of the French Admiralty. Took (i.e. manned) a smack of 15 tons under this commission and armed her with 16 men and two boys, and took on board a small amount of ammunition. Fell in on Friday night last with H.M.S. Flamborough, Captain Hughes, which was at anchor off Southwold. The Flamborough fired on his smack, took her and brought her into Harwich.

* Appointed the 20th day of May, 1702.
† Here spelt " Lawrance," but signed " Lawrence."

They confirm generally the evidence given by Francis Lawrance [see foregoing] concerning the capture of the St. Barb by H.M.S. Flamborough. Lawrence threw his commission of mark from the French Admiralty overboard, and would have blown up the ship if not prevented by Captain Hughes.

25 May. Guernsey. BERNARD ELLIS to NOTTINGHAM.

A shalop came in on the 23rd from St. Malo, brought by two [French] men and a boy, bringing an English merchant who had been given time to clear all his concerns. The merchants there are so afraid of our fleet that they have withdrawn with their effects, as have all the richer inhabitants. The poor stay, and a company in the castle. They have hauled all their ships high and dry, and only two small privateers are afloat. As security had been given for return of the men and boy, I allowed them to return at once; and I hope I have not transgressed in doing so. I desire orders on such cases to guide me in the future. Merchant ships which will pay some thousands in duty have lain here near three weeks awaiting convoy to the Isle of Wight or Spithead; so we badly need a frigate.

25 May. Kirby. LORD HATTON to SAME.

I have many complaints from Guernsey. One is that the four companies sent there are very thin and ill-armed, so that the garrison is weaker than it has been for a long time. Secondly, the merchants there hoped to have time to get all their ships and goods from French ports back; but this they will not be given unless we release a small French bark which was taken in the very road of Guernsey by the frigates which brought the relieving companies. Pray let her be released. A frigate is badly wanted there. [Details.] There are causes depending before the Committee of Council relating (1) to the election of a jurat, (2) to the church property, (3) to some forms of their laws and customs. On these pray hear what Sir Edmund Andros has to say and act thereon as you think fit.

P.S.—Pray appoint Peter Martin and Robert Lee to be Commissioners of Prizes in Guernsey, and Lee to take care of sick and wounded and exchange of prisoners. Priaux, one of the candidates for the post of jurat, is a factious and turbulent fellow and is backed by men of his quality. His opponent is an honest man.

Some of the petitioners waited on your honour this morning and have since told the others of what passed at the deputation.

The whole body of your petitioners request that, to avoid the present danger to their factory at Leghorn, you will move the Queen to address fresh letters to Sir Lambert Blackwell, her envoy with the Grand Duke of Tuscany, to supersede the former. The earlier letters intimated to the Leghorn merchants to withdraw their goods from the territories of Tuscany.

They desire to be now satisfied in the Queen's name that they may carry on their trade as before till further orders from the Queen, there being no place whither they can transport their large concerns nor security to protect them from loss or injury during removal.

From the intimation already given, petitioners have become odious to the people of the country, with whom they must necessarily deal. Their persons are in danger from the populace and the concerns of all the Queen's subjects in their hands are damaged by the necessity of selling for ready money and granting large discounts to get in their debts under urgency and fear. Their losses in this way are so great that petitioners believe they have already suffered more damage than any loss pretended by William Plowman.

Petitioners reckon that "the English estates" now at Leghorn amount to not less than 500,000£. They expect from Leghorn no fewer than 50 ships (some of which have lately arrived), though without convoy. All these carried out their full laddings of woollen goods, lead, tin, fish, and other products of the Queen's dominions. They have also at present several ships in the Thames lading with valuable cargoes of the same kind for Leghorn. Many have gone to Newfoundland to catch fish and bring them to Leghorn, and others gone to Russia and New England bound further to Leghorn. It is not now possible for them to recall any of these vessels.

The season is now opening for the new fisheries in divers parts of the Kingdom, the undertakers for which will be wholly ruined if the traffic to Leghorn is prohibited, "no other commodious port of trade remaining to the petitioners in the Mediterranean Seas."

They pray for a reference of their suit to the Queen and Privy Council that they may be "directed to such measures as may be for the safety of their partners and factors abroad, and their estates and trade now in danger." They are ready, by "council" and otherwise to offer evidence to disprove the loss pretended by Sir Alexander Rigby, Shepard and Plowman. Petitioners believe they can disprove their pretences and shew that they are merely disturbers of the government and ruiners of the trade of the nation.

MEMORANDUM on a Cartel for Sick and Wounded Prisoners.
   On May 26 the Earl of Nottingham, then Secretary of State, wrote to Mr. Burchett, Secretary to the Prince of Denmark, to lay before him that the Privy Council thought that instructions should be prepared for commissioners of sick and wounded prisoners, as well for their safe custody as exchange when a cartel should have been settled. Commissioners are accordingly chosen, and the Count de Mornay, having been taken on board a French man-of-war and brought to London, had leave to write to M. de Pontchartrain about a cartel. M. de Pontchartrain's answer was sent to the Commissioners of sick and wounded, who drew up some proposals for settling a cartel at sea. These were approved by the Queen and sent to the Prince's Council, with order, if they had no objection thereto, to deliver them to Count de Mornay for transmission to France.

P.M. to Nottingham.

The soldiers sent here to occupy Castle Cornet and garrison the island are raw and quite unfit for so important a duty. I am credibly informed that the Lieutenant-Governor of Jersey would not trust Castle Elizabeth in their hands, but bade the inhabitants keep it till further order. The inhabitants of this island would gladly do the same. Their loyalty has been unquestioned since the time of the Norman Conquest, as testified in many Royal Charters.

I pray for orders to the Lieutenant-Governor to keep the officers, and especially the French, in reasonable duty and not to allow them to interfere, as they usually do, with the people or their rights. The French officers beat and abused the High Constables as complained of to King William III.

Pray do not disregard this appeal, which comes from a loyal English subject and member of the Church of England.

P.S.—If this complaint is overlooked I shall be obliged to prefer it to some other Minister of State.

27 May.

Sir John Lowther to the Earl of Carlisle.

As to the press, many men of this town are now serving in the fleet, though not taken here in the way proposed. In the great storm of October last 48 out of the 53 ships then in port [here] broke their moorings. All drifted ashore, and the damage done was a great blow to this town. It took up to five months to repair. Several seamen were driven elsewhere to seek employment, and on January 8, when we were in some forwardness with our repairs, came the embargo on all ships except coasters. Our trade with Dublin was ever reckoned as coast-trade. This embargo was taken to be a prelude to a press, so all the seamen left the town; but, no press being put in force, many returned later. The ships laden were allowed to go for Dublin, with intention to take the men when they returned; but unexpectedly most of them were taken by the press ketches at Dublin, which is a cheaper way than to send them to Newcastle. To take more here suddenly will lay up all our ships, for we never have more than one-third of the men our ships require: the men going on one ship as soon as they return from another: the second loading while the first is away. When our convoy comes we may get more, for the high wages offered in war-time always bring out men whom neither the press-gang masters nor the civil magistrate can find. When I was in the Admiralty we always thought that the best way to get men was to keep the coast trade open and get men as they came to the ports. I understand that two small ships are to attend the orders of the Lords Justices at Dublin, and no doubt they will send us one of them, for coal is already very dear there. The coast trade embargo is no help to the press, but the contrary, and I hope we shall be allowed 1702. to trade to Dublin. I use another's hand as I have lately had gout. Please forgive this.

Hedges' Letters.

1. To Sir J. Clarke.

To consider, with Dr. Newton and Dr. Bramston, the Queen's declaration for encouraging privateers, her instructions for them and her declaration touching observance of the article in the Treaty of Ryswick and the laws of nations regarding ships seized before the declaration of war. To send an opinion as to amendments therein.

2. To Mr. Clarke.

Sends, by the Committee of Council's order, drafts of commissions for privateers and for the Court of Admiralty to sit in prize causes; also of declarations and instructions as to men-of-war and privateers. His Royal Highness to consider them and report, please, his objections (if any) by Friday morning. The Committee propose that captor men-of-war get 2/3 of a privateer and 1/3 of a merchantman. They desire it to be considered whether anything can be done to prevent the ransoming of prize ships taken by French privateers.

1. To Josiah Burchett.

The old packet-boats now at Falmouth are very much out of repair, and the Postmasters have had orders to repair them promptly, so that they may be used for the same service as in the last war. As the Admiralty have sent for these boats, I am to give you this information to be laid before his Royal Highness.

2. To the Mayor of Dover.

Dover Castle is not sufficient for all such French and Spanish prisoners as may be taken. You are therefore to take care for the safe custody (elsewhere) of all such prisoners. Send an account to the Navy Board from time to time of such prisoners as you take. An allowance will be made to you for them.

Also text, or note, of similar letters to the Mayors of Plymouth, Dartmouth, Falmouth, Southampton, and Ipswich.

Hedges to the Mayor of Dover.

Yours of the 17th. I am sure you have by now received directions as to the men taken out of the Dunkirk privateer. I send you copy of a warrant for your expenses in connection with deserters, and the original is here for your agent to call for. The thirteen Dutch deserters whom you have should be set on the fleet as it passes by Dover, to be delivered to the Dutch officers at Spithead. Let me know with what ship and commander you place them. As to the eight Englishmen who landed at Dover from Dunkirk you will hear further.

Steps will be taken speedily for a vessel to attend particularly at Guernsey, and I have told Lord Hatton so. In the meantime there are three frigates appointed to cruise between the islands and the French coast.

Memorial of Prince George of Denmark as Lord High Admiral of England, &c., and Generalissimo of all her Majesty's forces.

He has considered of several complaints of the unserviceableness of English canvas, wherewith the sails of her Majesty's ships are made. He sends a memorial thereon. The material was introduced instead of Holland's duck for benefit of the English manufacture. Its use may be of great prejudice to her Majesty's service.

A. Complaints of English sail canvas as aforesaid.

From Commissioner St. Loe, Plymouth Yard, 7 November, 1701.

Reports the Berwick and Kent forced in by stress of weather. They had sprung their main and fore masts, which is supposed to be due to bad rigging and sails. The sails were of English canvas.

From Captain Jennings in the Hamoaze, 7 November, 1701.

Same complaints. The English canvas supplied blows away "like brown paper in a gale of wind."

From Admiral Benbow in the Bredah, Port Royal Harbour, 9 December, 1701.

Wants a new suit of sails for each ship. The English canvas will not do the service of the third sort of duck. Is assured that not a single ship has sails which would hold in a gale of wind.

From Same, 24 December, 1701.

Same complaint. Has to husband his sails till there is absolute necessity for going to sea.
1702.

From Captain Cornewall on board the Exeter at Spithead, 9 April, 1702.

Same complaint. All the sails he had were blown from his yards even when it was not very bad weather. Had he been at the time on a lee shore he would probably have lost his ship. There is not a captain in the Navy who does not make similar complaints.

From Sir Stafford Fairborne on board the Sterling Castle in Cork Harbour, 12 May, 1702.

On Sunday last when we came in here the wind was not too strong for topsails reefed, yet every vessel except mine lost one or both topsails split. By this means the Bedford, which was on a lee-shore, was actually put ashore, but luckily on a soft "owsy" place within the harbour, and next tide we got her off. The Eagle had nearly the same fate. She did tail upon the "owze," but suffered no damage. The only remedy is to give us better sails, whether of Hollands duck or English canvas.

Yesterday off Mounts Bay I spoke with a Swede who came from Ostend on 13 May, o.s. He said that at that time eight French men-of-war lay under the Isle of Aix, near Rochfort, and four sail, the least of 70 guns, were near the Isle of Oleron ready to sail. They talked of sailing in three or four days for the Spanish West Indies.

Asking that the Earl of Nottingham will move for releasing the embargo on the James pink, Mr. Robinson master, to go for hemp for her Majesty’s service to Russia. The convoy to Russia is about to sail.

Memorial by the Lord High Admiral.

Vessels engaged in the coasting trade are still hindered by the embargo. Convoys are now appointing for their security so far as is practicable. I "humbly offer my opinion to her Majesty" that it is reasonable to take off the embargo from all ships and vessels trading coastwise, as also from all such as trade to Hamburg, Russia and the East countries. This is necessary because the said ships bring naval stores from those parts.

Sir George Rooke to [Nottingham].
I met the fleet off the N. Foreland last night, and hope to be at Spithead to-morrow. The advance does not help us much, as the transport ships, victuallers and naval store-ships are left behind and must be kept with this wind.

The Prince George is left behind by neglect of the captain. I think she should be reduced and the Hampton Court and Content, which are useful ships, manned with her crew.

29 May.
The Commissioners of Transports to the Committee of Council.
All the transports hired to go along with the fleet have now gone down the river. The pilots would not take down the two biggest ships till they got a good opportunity. No doubt all the smallest ships are by now at the Nore, and the rest will be there in a day or two, "if the wind does not over blow, which is now N.N.E."

Yesterday, the wind favouring, we shipped horse for Holland,—recruits for the Duke of Schonbergh’s, Brigadier Windham’s, Major-General Lumley’s and Lord Raby’s regiments; and all Col. Ross’ dragoons except forty which did not come in the morning. In the afternoon, the wind veering round, we thought it better to ship no more men, so sent back to quarters the other horses vizt. Lord Teviot’s dragoons, the Earl of Arran’s horse, and Colonel Wood’s recruits, with above forty of Colonel Ross’ dragoons.

Royal Sovereign, Spithead.

Sir George Rooke to Same.

I arrived here yesterday. We have "but a very melancholy prospect as to men." No tenders from the North and West bringing men have arrived; though we expected them; so that [even] wholly unmanned the ships which Munden stripped will not make the ships intended for the expedition up to their middle complements.

We are in other matters pretty much to pieces to execute our great design. The Dutch have four or five of their ships and almost half their land forces still left behind. We have a squadron of five ships and one of the best regiments in a remote and uncertain station cruising in the Soundings. The Swiftsure is cruising on the coast of Holland and the Pembroke and Exeter ordered to other services in the Channel. Our storeships and victuallers and most of our transports are still all behind in the River. These difficulties can scarcely be overcome, though if they could be obviated in any reasonable time I should hope for good success to our expedition if we had a sufficient land force to execute it; but time is precious, "so that I must repeat my opinion that no service can balance the hazard of bringing our great ships home in the winter season."

* See above at 25 May, 1702.

We lost some small craft by privateers [details] on our way to St. Helens: one carrying ordnance stores or water for the fleet. This comes from having no cruisers to act as outposts.

I heard yesterday of a "Grand-partie" of 200 sail in Conquet Road coming eastward, and thought it would be a very important service to intercept them; so sent four vessels [named] to cruise off Cape de Hague (La Hogue) and wait. Admiral Almonde has added four of his own. The wind is E., so the 200 sail may be prevented from coming up. I shall order the detachment to stay away if it can, by delay, be successful.

I am told that most of the ships of St. Malo are gone to Newfoundland. If our convoy could be strong enough to take them it would cripple the privateering from that place for the future.

The COMMISSIONERS FOR TRANSPORT to the COMMITTEE OF COUNCIL.

I send the drafts of instructions to Vice-Admiral Benbow, and to the commander-in-chief of the two ships that are to convoy the store-ships to the West Indies, also an order to Vice-Admiral Benbow to detach a vessel to bring home from New England two mast-ships when laden. The Earl of Nottingham thinks these should go to the Prince at Portsmouth to be signed, so I send them.

P.S.—I also send an order for his Royal Highness's signature, empowering the Judge of the Admiralty to proceed against prizes.

first to know whether the next vacancies have been promised to any other person, and, if so, to whom.

2. Sir George Rooke.

I have to-day read yours of the 1st in the Cabinet Council. I am to say that I have writ to the Admiralty to order the tenders to come away to the fleet with such men as they have, without waiting for more, and particularly to take care to bring safely from Ireland 150 men, whom Lieutenant Stewart has on board his ketch. The Lord Treasurer will also give orders that all the men on the Custom House sloops will be sent to man the fleet.

My Lords see how inconvenient it is to send away five of the ships and a regiment destined for this expedition, but care has been taken for their joining you, and unless you can find some other expedient for it my Lords cannot propose or execute any. The Swiftsure will probably return before you sail, or orders may be left for her to follow you. It is presumed the Exeter and Pembroke are in your call, and for the store-ships, the Lords have ordered the master attendant to go constantly to them and hasten them out of the river.

The rest of the Dutch have arrived and have probably joined you before this can reach you.

The detachment you have sent to intercept the two hundred French ships going east from Conquet Bay is much approved. God grant them success.

P.S.—There are but two transport ships at Woolwich. The rest are at the Nore. These are designed for eight hundred men, and have on board great part of the victuals for them. Details as to the sending on of these men and victuals to the fleet.

In all pp. 1½. Ibid, pp. 30–1 and 33–4.

3. To the Lord Treasurer.

The Committee of Council have considered the great dearth of seamen and how hard it is to get them. Knowing that there is a number of men employed in the Custom House sloops which they think can be of little use, by reason of the number of privateers, till some means be taken to protect them and the coast trade against the enemy’s attempts, they have directed me to request you to give orders for sending these men to man the fleet with proper precautions to prevent their escape.

P. 3. Ibid, p. 32.

4. To Josiah Burchett.

The Committee of Council have heard that the tenders from the northern and western ports have not yet come to the fleet with men. I am to say that the Lords think they should do so at once without waiting for further men; also that Lieutenant Stewart has 150 men on board his ketch in Ireland, and dares not come away with them for want of convoy, and that therefore due care should be taken to bring them to the fleet.
Pray lay these things before the Admiralty Board, in the absence of his Royal Highness, that the necessary orders may be given without delay.

5. To Josiah Burchett.

The memorial concerning English canvas has been read to the Lords of the Committee of Council. They think that the fleet should be supplied half with Holland’s duck and half with English canvas.

The instructions for Commissioners of prizes and of sick and wounded should be forthwith settled, and some proper persons appointed to execute the same. Pray get orders from his Royal Highness on these matters, and show him enclosed from the Lieutenant-Governor of Guernsey.

Extract from a letter from Mr. Ellis, dated Guernsey, 25 May, 1702.

For want of convoy to the Isle of Wight or Spithead twelve vessels have lain here three weeks. Their cargoes, it is said, will pay some thousand pounds in duty. We should have a frigate to attend this station.

6. To Mr. Ellis, Lieutenant-Governor of Guernsey.

We are informed that the inhabitants under your care have been abused by the officers there, and particularly by the French. Take care to prevent such abuses for the future, and protect the inhabitants from any insults, especially from the French officers.

Yours of May 25 has been read to the Lords of the Committee of Council. They approve what you did in relation to the shallop from St. Malo. That part of your letter which mentions the want of convoy at Guernsey has been sent to his Royal Highness for his directions therein.

Refers to the English Act of Parliament mentioned in the petition ("for the relief of Thomas Plunkett, gentleman," &c.).
Advises that by the said Act the Queen has power to permit petitioner to bring a writ of error to reverse his outlawry, if she so pleases.

Petition to the Queen of John Mapas, shewing that:

When ten years old petitioner was outlawed in Ireland for high treason supposed to have been committed by him when but seven years old. Petitioner knew nothing of the outlawry till it was confirmed by Act of Parliament in Ireland and made not pardonable by the Crown and irreversible for any error. Thereby petitioner, without committing any crime, is become incapable of inheriting his father's estate, to whom he is heir apparent, or of any other acquisitions.

In their last session, the Parliament of England, pitying petitioner, affixed to a bill then depending before them the annexed clause for empowering your Majesty to pardon petitioner, notwithstanding the provisions of the Irish Act. Your Majesty has assented to that bill, and petitioner prays that you will put it in execution and grant to petitioner so many writs of error as may enable him to bring all his outlawries in Ireland under examination for the purpose of their reversal.

Details as to despatches and blank orders sent down for his Royal Highness's signature. Proceeds:—I cannot, as things stand, proceed without the two transports, which have provisions for 800 men. I might do so if all the fleet were here, as we should have other stores [details] to draw on; but many ships are away. We cannot leave further ships behind [on account of their not being supplied] without making our sea force, and our land force, too weak. The Duke of Ormond thinks the latter even now none too strong. I hope the storeships &c. will tide it round with this weather and, when they come, I will embark the force. The transports sailed on Wednesday last from the Nore for Portsmouth; but the winds are light and contrary.

The two transports at Woolwich have gone down to Gravesend, and probably below it. The twenty-six transports bound for Holland with 1,500 horse have come back to Woolwich to revictual; and are almost ready to leave again.

6 June. [The Board of Ordnance?] to Prince George of Denmark.

We have received your letter of yesterday asking for stores and powder to make up the supply of several ships fifty rounds. To comply with what you ask, 2,141 barrels would be necessary, and considering how low our supply is, we cannot send out so much. Such "shot and other petty emptions" as are necessary must also be sent from this, and cannot, we fear, be sent round to Portsmouth soon enough to answer the service.

1. To Josiah Burchett.

The Prince of Hess-Darmstadt has desired a frigate to take him to Lisbon, whither he is going within a week. I am to let you know of it that his Royal Highness may give "such orders . . . for gratifying the Prince of Hess in this his request as may best consist with the other services of the fleet."

2. To Same.

The enclosed letter from the Lords Commissioners of Trade and Plantations was read before my Lords to-day. They think orders should be sent to the Newfoundland convoy as desired; and I am to tell you so that his Royal Highness may act accordingly.

Also note.—The enclosed, dated 1 June, was to request that a frigate or frigates might visit the ports and fortifications which the French are said to be making at Chapeau Rouge, and destroy the same.

1. To the Commissioners for Transport.

Your letter of yesterday reporting death and sickness of horses aboard has been laid before "a Committee of the Lords of the Privy Council." They vary their order of yesterday against disembarking horses, and leave it to your discretion to disembark any you think necessary. Take care that in case of the wind changing there be no delay for re-embarkation, but that the transports be sent to Holland as soon as possible.

Similar in effect to foregoing. The disembarked horses to be so kept that they may be promptly re-embarked.

Mr. Clerke, the Prince's secretary, writes that you say you have not yet got orders from the Queen to take the land forces on board the men-of-war that are to go on the expedition. The Prince directed me to ask for orders to be sent you to take in so many land men as would make up the men on board from the middle to the highest complement. I send you a warrant signed by the Queen for that purpose; also extracts of two letters from Mr. Stepney, the Queen's envoy at Vienna, relating to the expedition, from which you will see what notions they have of such a matter at that Court. Do you think of coming to town?

6 June. E. HARRYS to NOTTINGHAM.

I ask for appointment as a Commissioner of the Stamp Paper Office. Am very poor, and my family need support. The Prize Office and the [Commission for] exchange of prisoners are not yet settled. Too ill to attend myself.

Memorandum of measures suggested for the better safety of Jersey.

Nearness to France. Exposure to attack. If not united within itself, may be a great source of danger to England.
The defensive force should consist of companies of regulars—one from each regiment—as many as may be thought desirable.

In case of a dispute between the Governor and the Commander of the forces the Governor may be surprised and secured if all the soldiers are wholly devoted to and under their chief officer, and the island placed at the disposal of such party as the chief officer chooses. The chief officer often, to get popularity with the inhabitants, vilifies the Governor and lays blame for any little miscarriage at his door, and draws away the "giddy multitude" from their proper obedience to the Queen's representative. If each company were separate under separate officers this danger would be averted. Companies should not remain in garrison in the island above one year. If they do so, officers and men are apt to take wives and enter local factions.

A troop of dragoons should be kept in the island, for they can concentrate much more quickly than infantry at any place of landing, of which there are many in the island. They could "amuse" a landing party of the enemy till the foot came up.

It is essential to the Queen's service that at least three or four nimble frigates and a fireship should be appointed to cruise about the island to intercept those frequent coasting French fleets which, undisturbed, pass there with supplies for their eastern country and garrisons, and those from the East with naval stores for their fleet. Security to island's trade. The commanders should be active men who know the coast. Dangerous rocks and tides. I make these suggestions from local knowledge.

INSTRUCTIONS to SIR GEORGE ROOKE, Vice-Admiral of England and Admiral of the Fleet.

With the ships in the annexed list and a squadron of the ships of the States General (under the command of Admiral Allemond, who is ordered to accompany you) you are directed, as soon as the forces under the command of the Duke of Ormond shall be embarked on your fleet and on the appointed transports, to proceed with the first opportunity of wind and weather to Cadiz. There, in such method as may be resolved on by a Council of sea and land general officers, you are to land the said forces under the command of the Duke of Ormond, as also those that are embarked on the Dutch ships, in order to reduce the said town and island of Cadiz, to which you are to contribute all you can by an advantageous disposition of your ships and bomb vessels, so as to render the said attempt most secure and effectual. But if when you get there you find that there is such a garrison of disciplined troops in the town, or such a strong squadron of ships in the harbour, as to make this attempt impracticable, "you are then to proceed to Gibraltar or take in your way home Veigo [Vigo], Ponta Vedra, Corunna, or any other place belonging to Spain or France," which may seem proper to a Council of War constituted as aforesaid, with respect to the season of the year for your return home and other circumstances, which may not for the present be foreseen.

As there is no prospect of a correspondence between England and the fleet, you are to send home a frigate once in 14 days at least to report your proceedings and success; and you may expect "a clean one" as often with orders and advices from hence.

You are on all opportunities and occasions "to take, sink, burn, or otherwise destroy all ships and vessels belonging to France or Spain, either at sea or in their ports, and to render the fleet and forces as offensive as may be to the territories and dominions of France and Spain.

"You are to put the ships' companies of our fleet at six to four men's allowance of all sorts of provisions, paying the men for the same as it becomes due."

In case the joint forces employed in the service take any place which, in the opinion of a Council constituted as aforesaid, proves tenable, you are to leave such a number of ships as shall be judged necessary for the defence of the garrisons left in it.

When the troops are on shore and there is no means of calling land officers to a Council of War, you may, when it is necessary to call such a Council, summon the sea general officers only and act on such resolutions as may be there taken.

You are on all occasions to give all assistance to the land forces that is consistent with the safety of our fleet under your command; and "in all other matters which may occur relating to our service and the annoyance of the enemy and which are not particularly expressed in these our instructions, you are to act pursuant to the resolutions of a Council of War" constituted as aforesaid.
You are to preside at all Councils of War on sea, and the Duke of Ormond on all that are held on land.

We have sent an advice-boat to Sir John Munden, who commands an expedition to Corunna, to bring us news of the condition of that squadron, of its success and of the enemy there, and the commander of the advice-boat has orders, if he meet you on the way home, to give you duplicates of his letters of advice. You shall act on any such intelligence which you may receive in respect to the destroying any considerable number of the enemy's ships for which Sir John's squadron is not sufficient, or proceeding according to your instructions on the intended expedition to Cadiz, and act with the fleet under your command according to your discretion, sending forward the advice-boat with news of what resolution you have taken on receipt of the information, and what you propose to be further done from hence for our service.

You will herewith receive additional instructions from us which you are not to open till you are under sail. Having perused them, you are not to communicate them to anybody till after the success of your efforts at Gibraltar or Cadiz is known. You may then impart them to the Duke of Ormond or whoever you think necessary for the carrying on of the service therein directed.

7 June, Whitehall. ADDITIONAL INSTRUCTIONS for SIR GEORGE ROOKE.

If you succeed in taking Gibraltar or Cadiz you are to make a detachment of the six following ships which are sheathed, vizt.: the Boyne, the Expedition,

" Chichester, " Yarmouth,

" Cumberland, " Plymouth.

and cause them to embark on themselves, or on such transports as may be necessary, all the troops which remain over after a garrison, as large as is deemed necessary by a full Council of War, has been placed in the captured place. If you do not succeed at Cadiz or Gibraltar you are to put on these ships and transports 2,000 men, and as many more as a full Council of War think may be spared without prejudice to our service coming home, and so as not to spoil any other service that you may have in prospect coming home. In either case you shall instruct the Commander-in-Chief of the detached ships to go to Barbados with orders to disembark the troops on that island, or in some of the Leeward Islands where they shall be most useful, taking the advice of the Governor of the Island. Whilst there he is to do what he can to defend Barbados or the Leeward Islands against any attempt of the enemy, and to be assistant also in the defence of Jamaica, and to protect the trade of our subjects in those parts. He is to consult in this service with the Governors of the said islands, and to join and assist them in annoying the enemy either by sea or land, and act in such manner as may be deemed expedient by a Council of War. If he meets with any superior officer commanding our ships in the West Indies, he is to show him his instructions and take orders from him.

7 June.  LETTER from one of SIR JOHN MUNDEN'S SQUADRON.

H.M.S. Lancaster [?]*. Five leagues W. of Ushant.

We are to-day come to the Soundings to lat. 49° 30' [N.], and are ordered to cruise off Lands End to protect our homeward bound ships, "for we have already seen the French safe into the Groyne on 28 May." Opinions differ as to their number; we saw only eleven vessels.

I hope the Queen will send more ships to strengthen our squadron; for if this be speedily done it will not be too late to intercept their going yet; for one of the Spaniards, who is a prisoner, told me that they had not yet raised the 2,000 men which the Duke of Albuquerke is to take with him. Other details.
The Dolphin and Salisbury have taken two small French ships. The Salisbury fought a 70-gun French man-of-war on 15 May, but was driven off with injury.

"If there be speed in sending another squadron and two companies of soldiers we shall make brave work with them."

8 June.  BERNARD ELLIS to NOTTINGHAM.

On the 6th an English merchant came from St. Malo via Jersey and had not been stopped there. Many privateers sitting out there. Twenty will soon be at sea, including the Saint Esprit of 50 guns. Their Newfoundland fleet is very numerous—said to be 70 sail. Any injury to that would affect the town as much as a bombardment, which they still fear. Some small prizes still here pending your orders.

8 June.  JOSEPH BURCHETT to SAME.

I have your two letters of the 6th. Instructions will be given to the commander of the Newfoundland convoy according to what is desired by the Commissioners for Trade, &c. There is no vessel that can be appointed to carry the Prince of Hesse-Darmstadt to Lisbon unless she is taken off from a service that is absolutely necessary. The Lord Admiral's Council therefore submit it to consideration whether Sir G. Rooke may not be directed to spare one of the frigates for this service that are appointed to proceed with him, the vessel joining Sir G. Rooke again after her service is performed.

8 June.  THE EARL OF CARLISLE to [HEDGES ?].

As desired by her Majesty I asked for particulars about pressing men in the counties where I am Lord Lieutenant.

Queen's command:—To furnish the fleet with ten rounds of powder more than they now have from any available source, with all possible speed.

2. To Mr. Blathwayt.

The Queen desires to know what orders have been given regarding the transport of artillery to Holland and the Earl of Huntingdon's regiment; and that you give your orders, so far as necessary, at once for their embarking, that the convoy going to Holland may not stay for them. The Queen directs that it should not stay for the horses.

NOTTINGHAM to the JUSTICES OF THE PEACE near DARTFORD.

Command:—To order the convoy to sail at once with the stores and guns ready for Holland and not to wait longer for horses. They are to take the Earl of Huntingdon's regiment of foot with them. Detailed orders as to transports and convoy vessels. P. 4.

together with her Majesty’s warrant to sail at once, and sealed instructions which you are not to open till you are under sail. Yet it is not thought fit that any service of this kind should be a secret to you, and therefore—proceeds to relate the substance of the additional instructions as above.* Proceeds: This is to be kept entirely secret. The Duke of Ormond knows of it; and you should certainly know the whole design before you leave England.

5. To Sir George Rooke.

The Lords of the Committee of Council think that no strong force need be left to convoy such Dutch and transport ships as may be left behind you, because some of the squadron for the Channel may see them as far as the Soundings. “I heartily wish you all success.”

Seven lines. Ibid, p. 13.

8 June. Royal Warrant to Sir George Rooke.

Our will &c. is that you receive without delay the rest of the land forces designed for the expedition, and, as soon as they are embarked, set sail as soon as possible with what ships are ready on the expedition. Use your utmost diligence, “it being extremely important to our service that not a moment’s time be lost.” If the rest of the Dutch ships are not arrived and all our transports have not come up when you set sail, you are not to stay for them, but concert measures with Admiral Allemonde about a convoy to bring them after you.

9 June. J. Macky to [Nottingham].

There are many English prisoners in the ports of Dunkirk and Calais, whose friends are anxious for their relief; and above 900 French prisoners are in the various ports of England at great charge to the Government. I offer to exchange all the prisoners immediately by means of five ships which I now have ready in the port of Dover.

The Governor of Calais told Captain Gibson last Sunday that Monsr. the Superintendent of the Marines was ready to adjust the cartel with England whenever we should propose it; so the first ship which goes might carry over a letter to that purpose from the Lord High Admiral or your lordship.

If any of the captains of our packet-boats go over, the correspondence may be settled for intelligence, as it was under Lords Jersey and Manchester and Mr. Vernon.

press to have it taken off. His Royal Highness should move in Council accordingly.

It seems to be of the greatest importance to destroy the French ships at Newfoundland, both in regard to their setting out privateers and to the hindrance it may be to them if they want to man out a fleet, so many of their seamen being employed in the fishery there. The Prince should therefore move her Majesty that the Exeter may be added to the two fourth-rates and two fifth-rates now designed thither, and that Captain John Leake be put on board the Exeter to command in chief, with 10s. a day extra, and instructions for the performance of that service. The Newfoundland merchants are either to send their ships at once, or the men-of-war to go without them, as the French fleet is to return at the end of August, so that this service requires the utmost dispatch.

9 June. Transport Office.

The Commissioners for Transport to the Committee of Council.

All the fleet transports are at Spithead or Portsmouth except two. These have been some days at the Nore, waiting convoy.
The horses which lay wind-bound in the river have disembarked for their refreshment. We have taken up three ships to carry the two troops of Lord Raby's Dragoons to Holland, and believe they will be ready to go with the other horse.

8. To Josiah Burchett.

I send Mr. Dummer's proposal of June 9 to be laid before his Royal Highness. My Lords desire such measures to be taken as may be for the public service. Important.

Yours of the 6th. If there was any mistake in mine of the 4th about Mr. Ireton being your lieutenant-colonel it is not very material, as the Queen desires Mr. How should be restored to his post in the militia under you.

I know very well it has been the custom for the Lord Lieutenants to present the names of Deputy Lieutenants, and no doubt your lordship will do so to the Queen. In order to this, I gave you the names of several gentlemen who had been mentioned to her Majesty as suitable. This has very frequently been done, and "though very probably her Majesty will approve those of your lordship's recommendation yet, as she may refuse such as she dislikes, so if there be any of those gentlemen in the list I sent you against whom there is any just exception, if your ROYAL WARRANT to the LORD LIEUTENANT and CHIEF GOVERNOR OF IRELAND.

Lord Mohun, who is executor to Charles, late Earl of Macclesfield, has represented to us that in 1699, while the late Earl commanded a regiment of horse, he agreed for clothing and other regimental accoutrements for the use of the said regiment, and that, before they were ready, the regiment was sent to Ireland and the clothes &c. sent after them there. There being not off-reckonings enough due in England to pay for the said clothes, the Earl was compelled to give to the clothiers his bond with securities conditioned for payment for them, the clothiers refusing any assignment on the regiment on account of their going for Ireland. He prays for our direction that the sum may be satisfied out of the off-reckonings in Ireland. This request has been referred to the Paymasters General of both our Kingdoms, and they report that they find there is due to William Gratwick and partners for clothing in the year 1699 and 1700 (over and above what has been paid or given in debentures) 295l. 12s. 11d., and that the Earl of Macclesfield, when going to Ireland, contracted for several accoutrements which were sent to Ireland and no part of them satisfied by either of our Paymasters General, amounting in all to 853l. 2s. 2d. These sums amount in all to 1,148l. 15s. 1d. They find also that a sum of over 2,000l. is still due to the said regiment in Ireland for off-reckonings to the time of the said Earl’s death. Order the Paymaster General of the Forces in Ireland to pay 1,148l. 15s. 1d. to Mohun as executor to Macclesfield for discharge of this debt.

Captain John Porter represents to us that in June, 1701, he had a commission to be a captain in the regiment under the command of Colonel Frederick Hamilton, but that it was superseded by a commission to Captain John Moyle, who alleged that he had longer standing in the regiment than Captain John Porter; that, notwithstanding his commission was superseded and he [Porter] received no benefit thereby, yet his half-pay was discontinued in Ireland from 15 June, 1701. Pay him, as he requests, half-pay from 15 June, 1701, to 12 Feb., 1702, or till such other date as it shall appear to you that provision was otherwise made for him by way of a new commission. Dis-gave up his commission to the next half-pay captain of the regiment. Insert half-pay for Captain Stedman, as he requests, in all future establishments, and let it commence from the time he gave up his commission as aforesaid and be paid in the usual way. Details.

The Muscovy merchants say they fear that they will be to our Muscovy merchants (who are going for naval stores for the Queen's use and service) if they had certificates from his Royal Highness to say that this was the object of their voyages. They request you to move his Royal Highness to grant such certificates if applied for by the Muscovy merchants.

As to the duplicates of despatches and Declarations of War that are to be sent to the West Indies: those for the Leeward Islands may be put ashore by one of the men-of-war bound for Jamaica; and the Governor of the Leeward Islands will send on those to Barbados by the frigate which attends his orders.
These ships may also carry the despatches to the Continent of North America. Vice-Admiral Benbow will be ordered to forward them, including those to Bermuda. Details.

As to sick and wounded—his Royal Highness has by him a list of names of the Commissioners and will propose them in Council to-morrow. They will then only want the authority of the Council to act, as in the late war, and instructions are now ready for them which, it is hoped, will render that office of greater use than formerly.

As to the French at Newfoundland, his Royal Highness has had a memorandum [see above, pp. 112-113] given him and proposes to move on it in Council. Orders will be given to attempt what is possible on the French, but I fear the ships will be too late if they stay for the merchant ships; nor is it yet certain what course they will steer with the fish ships when laden. The merchants, I hear, have petitioned the Queen regarding their affairs.

I have yours (two) of yesterday and one of the day before. I will lay them before a Committee of the Council to-morrow morning, and may get an answer for you. The Duke of Ormond has received orders to embark the soldiers; and I hope the transports and victuallers with the provisions for 20,000 men may be with you as soon as this arrives, if not sooner, if they comply with what they have represented to my Lords. I have sent to the Admiralty for a list of the fire-ships, bomb-vessels and hospital ships which are to go with you, though I suppose you know their names. We thought there were six sheathed ships besides the Royal William.

2. To the Prince's Council.

11 June. DEPOSITION OF ROBERT MURRAY.

He is journeyman to William Aimé, of Bucklersbury, barber. Examined, he says:—

Knows Mr. Shipley, who is steward to the present Lord Mayor and his master's customer. Shipley often comes to his shop to be shaved. Some time before King William's death Shipley was at the shop talking with deponent, who is a Scotsman, about the affairs of Scotland, and thereupon said to the best of his remembrance the following words—"I thank God that the race of the Stuarts is out, and that everybody has their liberty." Deponent cannot be sure whether Shipley used the phrase "accursed race" or not, "but that he often talks at this rate about the Church of Scotland, and uses unmannerly expressions of the race of the Stuarts."

* Referred to throughout this Calendar as "Commissioners for Sick and Wounded."
1702. Mr. Williams, a customer, was one day a shaving at the shop, and a gentleman unknown to deponent came in and asked for Mr. Shipley, saying "Where is Mr. Shipley, who thanked God that the race of Stuarts is out; for," said the gentleman, "I thank God we have now another of the race."

I send the list of fire-ships, hospital ships and bomb-vessels. Eight fire-ships are mentioned in it, though you only propose to take seven. If there are not six sheathed ships besides the Royal William (which is not to go to the place designed for the other sheathed ships), only those which are sheathed are to go to that place. The Royal William is not mentioned in your [additional] instructions, and is not to go.

My Lords have been considering in conjunction with the Prince's Council the questions of raising of seamen, and the defence of the coasts by such ships as are left behind. The Prince's Council, being asked for information as to what is doing in the French ports, said that information on that point could best be obtained by your sending a frigate to look in at Brest or elsewhere, as you may have opportunity. You are the best judge of this and will, I know, omit nothing that is for the service.

——— to NOTTINGHAM.

I send this extract from a merchant in Falmouth to one in London:

"Yesterday arrived here a smack from Admiral Munden before Corunna, who gives us an ill account of his management, that six French men-of-war and four or five ships with stores past into Corunna in his sight, and he never attacked them, though had notice of their being at hand. The master of the said smack and one of his men have made an affidavit hereof, which our Major sends forward this post. It looks ill."

13 June.

Royal Sovereign, Spithead.

SIR GEORGE ROOKE to SAME.

Yours of the 6th and 10th received. I am glad to hear Mr. Methuen's account of affairs in Spain. Accounts from ships tell me that there are three French men-of-war in Cadiz harbour, and three others loaded with guns &c. for fortifying the town; so that I think we shall be able to do little with our land forces against the town, unless we force the port. If the French have ships in the port and mortars ashore, it will be very hazardous to do this, as the mortars "may happen to destroy two or three of our great ships in a night, lying so near the shore as we must ride if we enter the port; but "if we could get away and arrive before they are provided for their defence, I have great hopes of success. But new difficulties and delays appear every hour. Yesterday, in the afternoon, one of the transport masters came from Cowes to tell me he had no provisions aboard for the soldiers, and that several others were in the same condition. If so it will take more time to supply them than we have to spare, and it has certainly been very ill-management that the transports should come empty and the Victuallers hire ships to bring the provisions hither that must supply them."

The general officers should be sent down. Till they come we shall never know all our wants. Our ships here are all in perfect readiness to sail, and I will keep them so; but we want five line of battle ships and three frigates, which will straighten us in our embarkation.

P.S.—I hear the Duke of Ormond has arrived at Portsmouth.

13 June. Whitehall. Hedges to Sir George Rooke.

The news from Sir John Munden (sent you last night) was laid before the Committee of Council. You are at once to call a Council of "flag and general officers, both English and Dutch," consider the news, and let us have their opinion back at once, so that the Queen may have it laid before her to-morrow night. At the Council of War you are to consider how far it is possible to go into the Groyne with her Majesty's ships. If it is not, you are to consider where the land men may best be put on shore, so as to destroy the town and the French squadron; and if that squadron is still as strong as Sir John Munden states (which seems probable) you will look upon the importance of this service, if it can be effected, to be as great as any that is likely to be effected this year. If you decide to attempt the Corunna, and the French ships there, immediately send away advice-ships to find out, and inform us, whether the French ships are still there or no, and appoint a place for such advice-ships to meet you.

1. To the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland.

Queen's command:—To give the necessary orders for preparing recruits for the troops that were sent from Ireland to the West Indies. They are to be ready at Kinsale by the end of August, by which time there will be ships appointed to transport them.

2. To Captain Spann, of the Sorlings frigate at Torbay or Plymouth.

In spite of Admiral Rooke's order, Queen's command:—Do not proceed to Lisbon with the despatch for Mr. Methwen till further order from the Admiral or me.

* "The Corunna" and the old name "the Groyne" are used in the same letter.

3. To Sir George Rooke.

Informs him of foregoing. Adds:—If you meet Captain Spann take him with you and return the packet for Mr. Methwen to me.

4. To the Mayor of Dover.

Queen's command:—You did not do your duty as became one in your place in allowing the deserters who lately arrived at Dover to depart, and in not arresting them. If such a case occurs again, arrest them and report.

P. ⅔. Ibid.

5. To Josiah Burchett.

Queen's pleasure:—To let the merchants know that the Newfoundland convoy will sail on the 25th, and that they must not expect convoy for Newfoundland or the Streights, but only to Portugal and England.

6. To Mr. Blathwayt.

Queen's pleasure:—To direct all officers of troops in England to report how far short they are of full strength.

P. ⅔. Ibid.

7. To the Attorney General.

Queen's command:—To prepare a proclamation against next Council day requiring all magistrates to seize all deserters who may come from our army abroad into England, also to seize all persons whatsoever going to or coming from France without her Majesty's licence, promising a reward of 40l. for every person so seized (going to or coming from France) to the person who apprehends them.

P. ⅔. Ibid.

Josiah Burchett to Nottingham.

Sends a draft of instructions for Sir C. Shovell for consideration at the Committee of Council:

Four lines. Endd. S.P. Dom., Naval 6, 100. Enclosing:

A. Instructions by Prince George of Denmark [to Sir C. Shovell].

It is absolutely necessary for her Majesty's service to prevent the French ships at Brest, Rochfort and Port Louis from coming to sea and either going southward after that part of the fleet which is now gone south with Sir G. Rooke, "or coming into and committing insults in the Channel." You shall therefore take under your command the ships in the annexed list as well as such others as may hereafter be ordered, to join you, and, as soon as they are provisioned and supplied, ("which you are to hasten all that possibly may be"), shall cruize with them in such stations as may be best for the performance of that service. Take care to find out what preparations they are making at the aforesaid ports and to send me accounts thereof as often as you can.

Advices received from Vice-Admiral Benbow make it seem likely that M. Chateau Renault will return from the West Indies into these seas about August next, with the ships under his command and the Spanish flota from thence. You are carefully to look out for him and to use your best endeavours to intercept him in his passage either to Brest, Rochfort or any other port in the bay.

The 3rd Suffolk, Revenge, Restoration, Monck and Mary have been ordered to cruize in the station in the Soundings herewith sent you for security of trade expected home, but more particularly several rich ships coming from India. I authorise you to take those ships under your command when necessary and to use them as you think proper. But as the security of the foresaid trade is of great value to the nation, you are, if you take away those ships, to appoint others to cruise, and meet with and secure the said East India ships and any others which may be homeward bound from foreign parts.*

HEDGES to SIR GEORGE ROOKE.

The Burford, being designed for immediate service elsewhere, cannot go with you, as you suggest, in place of the disabled Revenge. As you have agreed with the Dutch Admiral to leave two ships to form a convoy for the forces which are yet to come up, you may leave the Revenge to refit and act as such, with the Swiftsure, which is coming from Holland. They will conduct the Dutch troops and the provisions which are to follow you. Order the Burford to be forthwith cleaned and graved. The Sorlings will be stopped by an order from Lord Nottingham. The Duke of Ormond can inform you that care is taken about the Declarations that you mention in your letter of the 12th inst. The idea of sending a ship to scout at Brest was proposed for your opinion and was not a direction. I send extracts of letters from Madrid and Mexico, and also an odd story sent by Mr. Stepney from Vienna. Prints and news will be constantly sent you from here.

15 June. Royal Sovereign, Spithead.

SIR G. ROOKE to NOTTINGHAM.

I have sent for the last packet for Vice-Admiral Benbow to Captain Dowglasse at St. Helens and will exchange it as you order.

You will see the resolution of the Council of War. If you want news from Corunna, please do not send any of the frigates which are commanded to attend this fleet. We have already too

I enclose petition of Brigadier Ferdinando Hastings (which sets forth his services and sufferings).* My Lords think him worthy of compassion, and I am to send his petition, so that steps may be taken for his relief.

2. To the Earl of Romney.

There is only one ship now in the river bound for Virginia, and she will sail for Spithead at the end of the week. My Lords wish you to put on board of her any arms and ammunition which are designed to be sent to Capt. [Col.] Nicholson for Virginia, as there may be no further opportunity to do so for some time.

My Lords think that Mr. John Lovell, who has been committed to Newgate for words spoken by him, should be discharged. Please give the necessary orders.

Josiah Burchett to William Aglionby.

According to the Queen’s pleasure, the notice was sent by to-night’s post to the merchants at the several ports trading to Newfoundland that the convoying ships will sail from Spithead on 25 June; and that, when their ships are laden, they must not expect to be protected to any other parts than Portugal and England. We still await her Majesty’s pleasure as to the Exeter joining the convoy and Captain Leake’s command-in-chief.

Hedges to Sir George Rooke.

I have received yours of yesterday with the resolutions of the Council of War. They were laid before the Queen, and her instructions in consequence are herewith. The Lords of the Council also saw them, and desire to add that you did very well in preventing the Council of War from giving any opinion upon the main expedition. I am further to acquaint you that it is expected you will at once go to Cadiz and attempt that place; on which the Queen will speedily send more positive orders. Mr. Methuen sends us great encouragement about Spain and Portugal, where[on] more to-morrow.

The Lords propose that you should strengthen your squadron from the Corunna by adding four or five ships to the 19 mentioned in the resolutions, for if there are any French ships there they will be in all 16 or 17, as advices show, and not only the 14 that Sir J. Munden saw.

Same. Instructions for Sir George Rooke.

We have read the resolutions taken at the Council of War held on board the Royal Sovereign yesterday. You shall pursue those resolutions so far as relates to the expedition to the Corunna and joining forces with the squadron, if the French fleet have left Corunna. In all other matters, follow your previous instructions.

The Queen has appointed Commissioners to treat with the Ambassadors Extraordinary of the States General of the United Provinces, and their Excellencies have desired that the treaties hereafter named may be renewed. Queen's command:—To peruse the treaties and say what alterations you think desirable for her service. Act speedily, as the Ambassadors are pressing for a conference on the matter.

The treaties are:

- The Treaty of Peace and Alliance of 1667.
- The Treaty of Navigation and Trade of 1668.

Please give order to your agent in Holland who has bought the 2,000 barrels of powder which the Queen is to send to the King of Sweden, to deliver the same to Mr. Lillienroot, the Swedish Ambassador at the Hague, or his order, and to take a receipt from him, and please send me the order to your agent that I may transmit it to Holland by next post, which is on Tuesday.

Yours of the 17th I have read to my Lords. The account of your doings which it gives is very different from that which was brought here by report. Your duty for the future in this matter will be laid down in the Proclamation; and for the disposal of the prisoners at Dover, her Majesty has also given directions by an Order in Council.

What concerns her Majesty's service at Dover is as much in Secretary Hedges' department as in mine, so that you need not communicate to me what you send to him.

Same. Hedges to Sir George Rooke.

Yours (two) of yesterday received. The Lords say you may take the Burford with you, and, after discourse with Mr. Methuen, add that you may send any ships which are disabled into Lisbon. If you do so, give strict orders to the officers to avoid all occasion of giving any offence to the people of Lisbon. The Commissioners of the Navy have been directed to take steps at once to create a credit at Lisbon for such sums as may be necessary for provisions and repairs for the fleet. I enclose the answer of my Lords to the queries brought by the Commissioners of the Revenue in Ireland to the Lords Justices there concerning ships come from France and Spain.

Four lines. S.P. Dom., Entry Book 101, p. 264. Enclosing:—

The Queries.

1. Whether if the cargo belongs to any of her Majesty's subjects (though the ship and men be French or Spanish), it is to be detained?

2. Whether French or Spanish ships sailing out of France or Spain before the declaration of war (the cargo belonging to her Majesty's subjects and the ships hired by them) be within the intent of the Lord Lieutenant's letter signifying her Majesty's pleasure?

Answers.

Though the ships came out of France before the war, yet, if the seizure was made since war was declared, it is a good seizure: but the goods, if duly proved to be the goods of her Majesty's subjects, and to have come from France or Spain before the declaration of war, ought not to be confiscated.

If both ships and lading were seized in an Irish port before the declaration of war they are to be detained only pending further order, according to her Majesty's declaration.

The draft Commission for the Governor of Barbados has been delayed by doubts as to what instructions should be given him regarding the captains of ships which may from time to time be appointed to attend that Government. Details. His Royal Highness now directs me to return to you the draft of the Commission and to say that he does not think it necessary that the clause should be inserted which empowers Sir Bevil Granville to erect a Court or Courts Admiral within his Government; for his Royal Highness, as Lord High Admiral, will himself give Sir Bevil a Commission as Vice-Admiral of Barbados, which, with the necessary instructions, will authorise him to erect such Courts and proceed therein according to the known laws.
His Royal Highness approves of the rest of the contents except the clause which empowers the Governor to suspend captains attending his Government if they do not obey his orders. Such a power might be wrested to the prejudice of the Queen's service. If a case of such disobedience occurs the Governor should complain to the Lord High Admiral, by whom, on the ship's return, the complaint will be strictly investigated, and the captain severely punished if found in fault.

C. Robert Bacon and others [Justices of Hartsmere hundred] to the Same.

In obedience to your lordship’s commands, grounded upon an Order of Council dated 26 February last, we, her Majesty’s Justices of the Peace and Deputy Lieutenants in the Hundred of Hartsmere in Ipswich division of the co. Suffolk, issued out our warrant to the Chief Constables of the said hundred, who sent out their warrants at once to the petty constables of every parish requiring them forthwith to perform the duties incumbent on them by virtue of the said Order in Council about pressing men for the then King's fleet. After strict search, however, they informed us that in this part of the county, so remote from the sea-coast, no seamen could be found to be impressed. On receiving your second letters of 23 May we repeated this step, and with the same result. We should have shewn our zeal more effectually if it had been possible. Dated, 16 June, 1702.

1. To the Commissioners for Trade and Plantations.

The Dutch ambassadors press for despatch of the treaties which were sent you for consideration. The Lords of the Committee of Council desire that your report on them may be laid before them to-morrow morning, when they have appointed to meet for that purpose.

2. To M. Von Vrybergen.

The enclosed, from his Royal Highness's secretary, shows that a squadron has been sent under the command of Captain Beaumont to keep M. Pointz [Pointis] from getting out of Dunkirk and pursue him if he goes out. His Royal Highness thinks that it would be well to attach to this squadron some of the Dutch men-of-war which are at Schonvelt, and that, if this is done, orders be given them to co-operate with Captain Beaumont for the common good.

24 June. Portsmouth. Commissioner Roope to [Nottingham].

I have from Sir George Roope your orders to supply beds for the soldiers going in the fleet. Sir H. Belloes tells me that in addition to what we have delivered to the Duke of Ormond [details given], there will still be wanting 2,548, and I have written express to Captain Atkinson to speed these down to me as fast as he can get them. There are very few here, and they cost 11s. each; and he who makes them will only undertake to deliver them at the rate of twenty-five a day, and that on condition of having his bills in London accepted at sight, and paid within one month. I have, to expedite the business, promised that this shall be done.

The horse and dragoons are being shipped in conformity with the Duke of Ormond's order. He has ordered me to victual the horses during their stay whilst the wind continues contrary. Hay will not come to less than 50s. a ton, and oats to 11s. or 12s. a quarter. I am going to-day to the Isle of Wight to get hay and oats, as there is none here. I will do my best and let you know what I do from time to time.

I have orders from the Duke of Ormond to send the ships for the artillery horses here.

The Duke of Hamilton to [William Keith].*

I had yours of the 2nd, and we hoped to hear that the Queen had received the address at the same time as she allowed you to kiss her hand. The courtiers here give out that she will not receive it, but I shall not believe this till I hear it is so. I wonder that Lord Blanter [Blantyre] has not written one word to any one here. They have passed the Act for the Union and put off the business of the Advocates till Saturday, when they say they are to bring in the Abjuration. Your letters came safe by the same cover as Mr. Mason's, so that way may be continued, though I shall expect to see you every moment here, for immediately the resolution is taken above as to your commission the sooner we know it the better.

P.S.—No doubt you have taken care that nobody has a copy of the Address till the Queen receives it and her pleasure as to it is known. I do not write to Lord Blantyre, so you may communicate this to him.

* 8 and 9 William III, c. 22.
I have appointed you commander of the ships named in the margin* bound to Newfoundland. Get them ready as soon as possible and sail at the first opportunity of wind and weather with them and such ships, bound to Newfoundland New England or Virginia, as are ready to go there and desire your convoy. On the voyage, enter the ports on the way to Falmouth and take into your care such ships as are ready to go with you; but do not wait for them longer than is absolutely necessary, since despatch is of the greatest importance. That the merchant ships may be ready, you are forthwith to send notice overland to the several ports, saying you are ordered to call for merchantmen, and making known your signal for them; and you are to endeavour to arrive off these ports by day, so that they may see you. Having got the ships together, you are to go to Newfoundland and cruise there for security of the trade and coast during the fishing season. You are to take particular care to escort the ships bound for Virginia and New England so far as your way shall lie together, and then leave them to prosecute their respective voyages. "And so soon as you arrive at Newfoundland, you are to inform yourself of the condition of the French, the number of their shipping, whether men-of-war or fishing ships or vessels, and the strength of their forts in those parts, and to govern yourself accordingly in the defence and safeguard of her Majesty's subjects and their ships under your care, proceeding according as may be thought most advisable by yourself and the captains under your command in opposing or making any attempts against the enemy at sea or in any of the harbours of Newfoundland, either by taking, burning or destroying any of their ships or forts as it shall be in your power. And as you are to take care that you do not imprudently expose the ships under your command or any of the vessels of her Majesty's subjects under your convoy, so are you to have the like regard that no service be omitted which you shall have a probability of doing against the enemy."

You shall assist the Admirals, Vice-Admirals and Rear-Admirals of the various ports and harbours in Newfoundland, as needed, in preserving peace and government amongst the seamen and fishermen there, and in apprehending offenders. You are to take care that no man who does not belong to her Majesty's ships be received into any vessel under your command or transported to Newfoundland, and that no fish be taken on board any of your vessels except what is for the use and spending of the said ship's company. When out of the Channel you are to place the seamen under your command upon short allowance of victuals of six to four men's allowance, or otherwise as you think necessary for the lengthening out of your victuals; "assuring the seamen that they shall be duly paid for the same."

* In margin:—The Exeter, Assistance, Reserve, Charles galley, Looe; the Wolf and Shark sloops.
ANNE.

You are to continue guarding the fishery at Newfoundland no longer than till 25 September next, unless you find it absolutely necessary: and then, if the fishing ships shall have made their voyage, you shall come away with them. When you have escorted them as far as you think proper, you are to send a fourth and fifth-rate with the vessels bound for Portugal to escort those vessels. Order the ships you detach to see their convoy first to Lisbon and then to Oporto, and then, without delay, to come to Plymouth, and, failing orders there, on to the Downs and report: but warn them before they approach Portugal with the fishing ships to ascertain if there has been any rupture with that Crown and, if they find there is, to bring their convoy to England.

Having detached the convoy to Portugal, you are to bring the rest of the vessels to England, "it being her Majesty’s express command that none of her ships shall be exposed to the insults of the enemy by their convoying any of the fish ships to Spain or any ports up the Straights." When you arrive, call at Plymouth and, failing orders, come up to the Downs. During your voyage give convoy to all other vessels sailing your way which desire to go with you: and direct the two ships which you detach with the trade for Portugal to do the like.

As the Commissioners for Trade and Plantations have been assured that it is absolutely necessary for the safety of the harbour of St. John, Newfoundland, that a chain, which has been sent out some time, should be fixed there, you are to employ the carpenters of your ships and their crews and the seamen, if needed, to fix the boom and float the chain.

If the Southampton and Advice join you during this service you shall take them under your command and employ them as you think fit and, if you think well, send one of them with the fifth-rate to Portugal.

At the desire of the Council of Trade and Plantations, you are, during your stay at Newfoundland, to make the several inquiries the heads of which you will receive herewith, so far as you can without prejudice to your other services. On your return, send your answer thereon to them and to me.

It is likely that you may, before you sail, receive other instructions from the Queen as to how you are to act with respect to the naval force which the enemy may have at Newfoundland. You must diligently obey such instructions and all others which the Queen may hereafter send you.

Yours of the 23rd and 25th. I am sorry that the transport service has been no better provided for and computed, and that you are put to such shifts at this juncture. Your proposal to sail at once is approved, though some of the transports be left to follow you: but we suppose that the ships which were in the Downs, and sailed thence on Wednesday last, have by now reached you. They have two large transports with them, and the Duke of Ormond has, as we are told, hired two more, which should suffice.

Queen’s command :—To give order to release the ships named in the enclosed account, which were in her Majesty’s ports before the declaration of war, and were detained by the Customs officers. Direct the officers at the ports to allow no men to leave on such ships except such as came with them.

Also note.—The ships were the Nonsuch of Chalevette, 30 tons, Francis Brossard master; the Magdalene of “Bourdeaux,” 17 tons, Francis Jouset master, stopped at Bristol. Also the Hannah of Bridgewater, of 70 tons, Hezekiah Stocker master, bound from Nantes to Amsterdam with French goods and stopped at Falmouth.

2. To the Commissioners for Sick and Wounded and Exchange of Prisoners.*

Queen’s command :—To inform yourselves as accurately as you can of the number of English prisoners that are detained in France, and in what ports of the Kingdom, and to attend “the Cabinet Council” at 10 a.m. on the 30th.

Their petition shews that on 8 March last the tower and steeple of their church “through meur age” fell down. The cost of rebuilding it is computed at 4,800l., and as they can only pay a small part of this sum they have prevailed with very worthy trustees (whose names benefactors [sic] are, with a plan of the church, annexed) to receive contributions. 1,763l. has already been contributed, and the church is so far advanced that it will be ready for roofing as soon as timber can be cut for it, “which roof is to be supported geometrically without pillars,” which will require at least 200 load of timber by computation. There is plenty of good old wood in your Majesty’s forest of Whichwood [Wychwood] in Oxfordshire.

They pray for leave to cut so much.

Order, 27 June, Whitehall. Referred to the Lord High Treasurer for consideration and report. Further pleasure.

I have yours of the 23rd, and am very pleased that you insisted on presenting the address to the Queen in person and refused to let anybody else have it. I hope you will take care to read it, and then present it. If her Majesty is advised to refuse it, I beg you may come back at once. You have greatly raised your reputation here by your conduct in the matter, and all your constituents will thank you for it. I am very pleased with what the Countess of Marlborough said to you. Please make her my compliments and say that I am afraid of troubling her with letters. I have heard nothing from Blantyre of the letter I wrote to her by him, but, "by the manner she has treated you," I am convinced she is well disposed towards us. There has been a great controversy here about the Abjuration oath, and it was carried only by four whether it should receive a first reading or lie on the table. There are great heats among them, and though we have left them they are far from agreeing amongst themselves. I wrote this some time ago to the Lord Treasurer, and now he sees I am right. The business of the advocates is put off. They continue firm to what they have done.

29 June. JUDGE ADVOCATE BATHURST to the SECRETARIES OF THE ADMIRalty.

I have, under his Royal Highness' order, been taking evidence on oath of all the officers belonging to the squadron lately under Sir John Munden with regard to his action off Corunna. I am obliged to say that such general examinations, if they are for his Royal Highness' information, may be effectual, but that if they are intended to prepare the way for a trial of Sir John at court martial, they are contrary to the procedure in all our criminal courts (except as allowed by the late Act in cases of high treason); nor is it agreeable to my duty, which is, I think, to get information on oath of such persons only as lay blame on the person accused in order to put him on his defence. I have found the inconvenience of this in a previous case, vizt., in the trial of Captain Harlow for the escape of M. Ponti [Pointis], when Sir G. Rooke, then Admiral of the Fleet, was ordered, with my assistance, to examine all the officers of that squadron on oath.

The effect of this order was "that at that trial I found myself under a necessity of laying aside all those examinations as if they had never been made, and only to examine again upon oath in Court such persons as I thought most material towards making good the charge laid against him."

To examine the captains of Sir John Munden's squadron would more probably be a disadvantage to the Queen in this case, for many of them, having set their hands at Councils of War to most of the steps made by the flag, seem to have made themselves in some sort parties. These things his Royal Highness should, I humbly think, consider. Unless otherwise directed I must go on as I have been ordered, and desire to be told the names of all those who, by letters or otherwise, have charged Sir J. Munden with blame on this occasion, so that I may have their evidence for the Crown when the trial comes on. Meantime, I shall examine the inferior commissioned and warrant officers on board the ships now at Spithead.

Josiah Butchett to Nottingham.

Enclosing an extract of a letter from Vice-Admiral Benbow.

Enclosing:—

1. Extract as above.

This by the Fowey brings you a duplicate of what I sent by the Margate. We have as yet no certain news of the French. 'Tis said they are sailed for Havanna, also that they are still at Legan [Leogane].

I have sent several out to know the truth, but still 'tis doubtful, so that this day some of our ships are sailed and I in a day or two will follow and join them, though not in a good condition, having lost above 600 men.

This Government, since the death of Mr. Selwyn, make great difficulties about giving us men, though it is in their power to do so, and they at the same time are sure that if war comes nothing but our shipping can protect them. But, if they do not, necessity has no law, and I will do my endeavours while I live, to keep the King's ships under my command in the best condition as men-o-war, which I humbly conceive is the intent of our coming into these parts.

I intend to cruise with the Bredah, Defiance and eleven other ships [names given] between the east end of Jamaica and Petit Guana for the health of my men and to inform myself how matters go in those parts, and to stay there till we have news from England, which will be welcome—peace or war.

I repeatedly asked the Governor for men and, being as often refused, [he] at last issued orders that I should take every fifth man from every ship in the harbour and have from the shore what strength were there. However, the news got out and the result was that in this seeming favour I could not get above 60 men, and some of our own hurt by shot from the sloops. Nor can it be otherwise while a merchant commands Port Royal and a planter governs. "Private interest is what they aim at without regard to the King's order or security of his island, whose interest here will be either lost or ruined if left in these hands."

1 To the Attorney General.

You have reported on the petition of the aldermen of St. Albans, which was referred to you by her Majesty's order, that if the freedoms were granted after the Court was adjourned they are void, and the Mayor and two aldermen guilty of a misdemeanour for which they may be punished by indictment or information. If the law cannot well be enforced except by a prosecution in her Majesty's name, she is content that it be used for that end.

2. To Josiah Burchett.

I think it reasonable to settle 200l a year on Dr. Newton, Advocate General to his Royal Highness. Inform his Royal Highness.

30 June. The Duke of Hamilton to [William Keith ?].

Mr. Beuerman [Bowerman] arrived about two o’clock on Sunday. I had yours of the 23rd the day before. This made what came by the express the more surprising; but now that that is over, by no means let any further application be made for presenting our address, and I am very glad you say it’s sealed up. I desire it may continue so, and that you bring it down with you when your convenience allows you to come. Be sure it is kept safe meantime and where you can come at it.

I am persuaded that those who advised her Majesty not to receive it have not considered her service, but its not proper to talk of that now. It will be seen who gave her Majesty the best advice, and time will shew whether it had not been better for her service this Parliament had never met. “It is this day adjourned, there having been the greatest debates and heats imaginable in relation to an abjuration oath which was carried to have a first reading on Saturday last, and this after great caballing on both sides. When the matter was going to the debeat the Duke of Queensberry adjourned the Parliament till the 17th of August.”

Everybody here is very sensible of your zeal and services to your country. We only hope that they may not expose you to some resentment. We shall be glad to see you back here, and desire you to be circumspect in your conversation where you are.

P.S.—The advocates’ affair is remitted to the Council. The heat of the divisions on the other matter has been so great that there was no time to think of them.

JULY, 1702.

The Committee of Trade and Plantations to Hedges.

As commanded, we have perused the treaties between England and the States General of the United Netherlands, with particular regard to what concerns trade. On consideration of the 26th Article of the Treaty of Breda of 1667 [of which the text is here set out], we take leave to observe that on such occasions as the States lay an embargo on their own ships, requiring each fifth mariner out of every merchant ship to serve in war, they make the same requisition on every English ship in their ports, demanding every fifth mariner, or money in his place. We do not think that this is conformable to the article; but if the Dutch insist on exercising this right they should be told that the Queen has a similar right in respect of Dutch sailors under the same treaty.

On the 28th Article of the Treaty of Breda [of which the text is here set out] we think it should be agreed that no captain or officer should demand any payment or gratuity for giving convoy in accordance with its terms.

Ships from the English plantations convey goods directly from and to Dutch ports, by which the Queen loses the customs; and the plantations, especially those under Proprietary Governments, carry on a trade which is contrary to the Acts of Navigation. We think that the English consul at Rotterdam and other ports of Holland should be allowed to search ships coming from, or going to, our plantations, so that they may be prosecuted according to law; but we see that this would be very hard to carry out.

George Clarke to Richard Warre.

I am commanded by the Prince to send you, for the Earl of Nottingham’s information, extracts from letters received from Commissioner St. Lo at Plymouth touching several French ships which have been seen off the Groyne and from Mr. Yates at Bristol with news from the West Indies.

I am also to send you an extract of a letter from the Commissioners of Victualling saying what they can do in relation to the provisions lately ordered to be prepared for the West Indies, and shipping to carry the same. Pray lay these before my Lords so that the Queen’s pleasure may be known at once.

A. Commissioner St. Loe* to [the Secretary to the Lord High Admiral].

*The Hannibal and George galley came in here yesterday from Smyrna and Scanderone, and from Livornia [Leghorn]. About 15 days ago they saw 24 ships off the Groyne. Eight of these were supposed to be men-of-war, and I think they are the ships that are to carry the soldiers to the West Indies. Some days after one of them met with a Swede's ship of 500 tons, bound for Cadiz with naval stores, and were informed that four more sail were speedily to follow them. They steered S.W. The Rising Eagle says that two rich French East Indiamen are "suddenly" expected home.

b. Mr. Yates to [the Secretary to the Lord High Admiral].
The Don Carlos (James Smith, master,) from Jamaica arrived here yesterday. She left on 3 May in company with the Fowey man-of-war and 16 merchantmen. [Details.] They were 23 days going through the Gulf, and met two Londoners that had brought negroes. They also heard from a small Irish vessel that the Summers frigate, belonging to the Guinea Company, was ashore on the Jordains off Cuba, but that the men were saved. About 22 May they met a Portuguese that had carried negroes to Carthagena, which told them that the French fleet were at Havana and the Spanish flota at Vera Cruz, but that the silver was not on board and that the Spaniards would scarce trust it under their convoy.

Other details.

P. 4. Dated, Bristol, 29 June. Ibid, 6, 106b.

c. The Commissioners of Victualling to Richard Warre.

We were lately ordered by the Lord High Admiral, through the Navy Board, to prepare victuals suitable for the West Indies for 4,000 men for six months, at whole allowance, and to hire the ships to carry both the provisions and 600 men with two months' allowance; and that six of the said ships should be of 300 tons burden. The victuals were to be ready by August 1. We to-day laid before his Royal Highness our difficulty in complying with this order, and were directed to set it out in writing.

There are not many ships of that burden to be chartered. Upwards of fifty have lately gone to Archangell; and, treating with masters and owners of smaller ships, we find some are not sheathed and cannot be ready for five or six weeks. Others require to be victualled and manned at the Queen's charge. Some desire to be paid from the time they begin to load till they return to London, and many refuse to go, fearing that when they get to the West Indies their men will be seized [for service in the fleet] and they will be compelled to lie still there. Most do insist on 5l. a ton if they are to be discharged on delivering their provisions, and yet to have their men protected both out and home. They also demand demurrage in case they shall not sail by the time agreed on. We have offered 3l. 10s. 0d. a ton, which is the most ever offered by this office for such service.

We think we shall have enough provisions, as we shall be able to get the pork off the ships which are to be discharged. Pray lay these matters before his Royal Highness.

GEORGE CLARKE to JOHN ELLIS [Secretary to Hedges].
Sends a letter from Mr. Bathurst, Judge-Advocate of the Fleet, as to the difficulty of examining officers on oath in connection with the trial of Sir John Munden.* The Lord High Admiral desires it to be laid before Secretary Hedges.

[1 July.] SAILING ORDERS by SIR GEORGE ROOKE.
In case of separation on this side Portland with the wind westerly, the place of rendezvous is St. Helens. If the separation is to the west of Portland and in the Channel, it is Torbay. If you separate with an easterly wind it is 20 or 30 leagues S.W. from Scilly. If you miss the fleet there open your sealed orders and act on them.

Sealed Orders.
Make the best of your way to N.W., ten or fifteen leagues from Cape Finistere. If you find no orders there go to the Groyne [Corumna]. If you find no orders there proceed to the Bay of Bulls [?], near Cadiz.

MEMORIAL by the LORD HIGH ADMIRAL and GENERALISSIMO [Prince George of Denmark] to the QUEEN in COUNCIL.
I recommended it to Sir Cloudesly Shovell to cause the most necessary ships that will be left at Spithead when Sir George Rooke sails to be manned out of others. He proposes thereon to unman the Royal William, Victory, Namure and Lancaster, as Sir George Rooke did the Britannia, Content and Newark at Sheerness, to enable him to proceed with the ships going with him on the expedition.
It is submitted to the Queen whether, in view of the preparations being made, or likely to be made, by the French this summer, these ships should be unmanned and laid up, or whether it may not be necessary to go on and man them again, lest, when the fleet is separated, the French should come into these seas with a superior strength.

REGULATION of PAY for the Three Regiments in the West Indies according to the Establishment.
We think it necessary for defence of our West Indian possessions to maintain out of our Irish revenue the three regiments of foot commanded by the late [sic] General William Selwyn,

* See above at p. 145.
1702. Colonel Richard Brewer and Brigadier Zachary Tiffin; the first two of which are in Jamaica and the third in the Leeward Islands. We confirm the establishment made for them on 1 August, 1701, by King William III, commencing at the times hereafter mentioned.

We think that the regiments should continue to consist of companies of 38 men (the number at the time when the regiments were shipped in Ireland) till further order, although they are put down at 60 in the establishment of 1 August, 1701. For the due mustering, paying, clothing and recruiting of the said regiments during their stay in the West Indies, we make the following regulations.

Detailed regulations follow.

Also an establishment* for the three regiments aforesaid with details of pay for officers and men and names of reformed officers, who are to be posted to vacancies as they occur. Also form of a muster-roll for the companies in the West Indies. P. 4. Undated, but the establishment noted, "Entered 29 [June, 1702]." Ibid, pp. 13–16.

1 July. Military Establishment for Ireland.

To commence on 1 July, 1702. To supersede all former establishments. No new charge to be added without information thereof first given to the Lord High Treasurer or the Commissioners of the Treasury for the time being.

Each regiment has also a company of Grenadiers to complete it. For these the establishment is as follows:

Captain (8s. a day) 146 0 0
Two Lieutenants (each 4s. a day) 146 0 0
Two Sergeants (each 1s. 6d. a day) 54 15 0

Total for the Regiment of Foot 11,263 5 10
There are eleven of these regiments of foot, the pay for which, at this rate, comes to, per annum 123,896 4 2

7. Three Regiments of Foot in the West Indies.
The establishment for these is the same as that for the regiments at home, subject to the following differences:—
   Amongst the field and staff officers the major gets 5s. a day instead of 4s.
   In each company there is only one drummer instead of two, but there are 60 privates instead of 50, and each private is paid 8d. a day* not 6d.
   The result is that these infantry companies cost each 1,113l. 5s. 0d. a year.
   There are nine such companies in each regiment.
   There is also in each regiment a company of Grenadiers. Here the establishment allows two corporals instead of three, one drummer instead of two and sixty privates instead of fifty, at 8d. a day.
   The total for the Grenadiers is, consequently, 1,131l. 10s. 0d.; and for the whole regiment 11,902l. 0s. 10d.
   For the three West Indian regiments it is therefore 35,706 2 6

Lord Blaney in lieu of the Government of Sligo, Lieutenant-Colonel Freeke (details), Lieutenant-Colonel Gwyllim, Major Monjoy, Captain Meridall, Lieutenant-Colonel Philip Reeves, Lieutenant-Colonel Montargus. The last six pensions to last till the holders are otherwise provided for.

11. Annual charge for fire and candles for the army quartered in barracks in the several following places with the charge of barrack masters there and other contingent expenses.

List follows of 104 places where there are barracks and garrisons, shewing how many horsemen and footmen are in each and how much coal, turf, firing and candle is allowed for each.* The garrisons are very small and are in all only 36 horse and 231 foot.

Barrack masters (at 36l. 10s. a year) are allowed at the following places:—Carrickfergus, Charlemont, Drogheda, Sligo, Londonderry, Enniskillen, Cavan, Longford, Mullingar, Mullett, Galway, Maryborough, Athlone, Silvermines, Kilkenny, Clonmel, Charleville, Bantry, Dingle and Wicklow.

Town Majors (18l. 5s. a year) are allowed at Dublin, Limerick and Duncannon, and a fort Major at Kinsale.

Barrack masters and town majors &c. come, with other small charges, to 9,836l. 10s. a year.

An abstract of the above charges shews that in all they amount to 265,376l. 5s. 0d. a year.

1 July. Windsor.

ROYAL WARRANT to the [CHIEF GOVERNOR OF IRELAND].

It is likely that the garrisons may be withdrawn out of several of the barracks for which firing and candles are allowed in the foregoing establishment; and we are told that the salary of barrack masters should be increased from 36l. 10s. to 50l. a year.

* The names are all well known places in Ireland and are omitted to save space.
Pay them the difference between these sums out of the money saved on the firing and candle allowance by reason of the withdrawal of garrisons. The Chief Governor may from time to time change the appropriation of the annual sum of 9,836l. 10s. allowed for barrack masters [see above] in the establishment.

The Prince's Council to Hedges.

We have, as commanded, considered whether Sir George Rooke should leave behind some of the largest ships at such place as he shall succeed in "to prevent the hazard of their return," late in the year, and have been ordered to state how many first and second class ships, exclusive of those with Sir George, can be ready for service next year. As we do not know what place Sir George is to attempt, or when he may have success, or in what condition his ships will be after his attack, we think the first of these questions should be left to the decision of Sir George himself and his flag officers. If he leaves the five first and second rates now with him, there can be fitted out for service next year the Britannia, Queen, Victory, Namure and St. Michel, and possibly the Royal William.

NOTTINGHAM to the PRINCE’S COUNCIL.

Sends a petition from the City of Exeter to be laid before his Royal Highness.

Note.—The petition sets forth that Exeter and the neighbouring trading towns are in great need of coal and “culme.” They pray for a convoy for their ships to and from Wales with those commodities.

SIR GEORGE ROOKE to HEDGES.

We got out last night with a light N.E. breeze. We are in ill condition to execute so great a design. Part of our naval and land forces have not joined us. All our victuallers, all our naval stores and great part of our ordnance are yet behind. “I say these are melancholy conditions at this time of the year, but rather than there should be any umbrage of a delay on my part, I am willing to proceed in any condition.” I hope that we shall be able to defend ourselves against any misfortune at sea, and that the Duke of Ormond will be able to do good service with the land forces. I will do my best.

I left the Somerset behind to bring on the transports from Portsmouth and victuallers from the Downs, and hope they will overtake us before we reach Plymouth.

I send the orders of rendezvous and the sealed orders in case of separation.

Admiralty Office.

JOSIAH BURCHETT to NOTTINGHAM.

Mr. Dummer’s vessels, which it was proposed to use as packet-boats for the Plantations, were ordered to be hired by order from his Royal Highness to the Navy Board. The Navy Board object to paying for them. I send their letter. There is no objection to their having letters of marque, wearing the Queen’s colours and having their men protected; but as their service is quite remote from the Navy, his Royal Highness cannot admit of their being paid out of funds wholly appropriated thereto.

SAME to SAME.

Amongst other ships left behind when Sir George Rooke sailed are the Revenge and Suffolk at Portsmouth with Sir Cloudesley Shovell. The East India Company were with the Prince’s Council yesterday and were urgent for some ships to go out cruising, as they expect a rich trade daily, and the seas are not secure. If the Queen consents, these vessels, which are clean, can be sent out. We should know soon, that the merchants may be told what they have to trust to.

NOTTINGHAM'S LETTERS.
1. To the Commissioners of Sick and Wounded.
Queen's command:—Directs that M. de Morney [Mornay], the commander of the French man-of-war lately brought into Portsmouth by H.M.S. Rochester, with his lieutenant, "chaplain or monk," two gentlemen and servants be sent in custody to London and lodged in the Savoy Hospital. All French prisoners in future to be lodged elsewhere than at Portsmouth, and not in sight of that garrison.

2. To the Lord High Treasurer.
Queen's command:—To send you a paper regarding payment of arrears to Mr. Cole, Consul at Algiers. It is important for our good relations with that Government that he be paid, to enable him to live with more credit in that city.
Also note that the Consul is owed for two years' extraordinaries and over one year's ordinary entertainment. The said Consul cannot have money there, when he wants it, under three or four per cent. per month.

No more Dutch troops will come to follow the main fleet; so the two English and two Dutch ships which Sir G. Rooke intended to leave behind to convoy them need wait no longer. Inform his Royal Highness.

Admiralty Office.

JOSIAH BURCHETT to NOTTINGHAM.
Sends a full state of the fleet at home according to orders. The same shall be done every Friday morning.

Enclosing:—
List of H.M.S. ships in sea pay at home, with their numbers of men and guns as also their respective stations, or what orders they are under.
Lists follow. The ships are divided into the following classes, their names, men and guns being given in each case.
1. With Sir C. Shovell at Portsmouth or Spithead.
2. At Spithead unmanned, if their crews be taken for class 1.
3. At Blackstakes, unmanned by Sir G. Rooke when he left the Nore.
4. The Dunkirke squadron. Vessels with Captain Beaumont and those which have been ordered to join him.
5. Other convoys and cruisers. Details follow of ships appointed for the Newfoundland convoy, the convoy between the Downs and Falmouth, the designed convoy to Hamburg, &c., ending with yachts detailed to the Isle of Wight, Jersey and Ireland.

Josiah Burchett to Nottingham.

His Royal Highness's command:—To send you Sir Cloudesley Shovell's suggestion that when the commander of the Newfoundland fleet gets out of the Soundings he may have orders to leave two frigates to go with the store ships and himself make the best of his way there with the rest. Please submit it for the Queen's decision.

I send letters from Vice-Admiral Benbow asking that a sailor condemned by court-martial may be pardoned, that, if you think fit, he may be put into the next general pardon.

P.S.—Captain Leake agrees in Sir C. Shovell's suggestion.

A. Vice-Admiral Benbow to the [Prince's Council?].
Benjamin Butling of the Kingston was lately condemned by court-martial to be hanged for desertion. I cautioned the other seamen not to desert or else I should have to hang Butling. As the service has not suffered much I ask that he may be pardoned.

P. ¾. Extract. Dated Jamaica, 13 April, 1702. Ibid, 112A.

B. Sir Cloudesley Shovell to the Same.
The squadron for Newfoundland will be ready in two or three days. Captain Leake would do well to leave two of his squadron with the merchantmen and store ships when he is out of the Soundings, which, I think, is out of danger from the enemy. Captain Leake should make all haste to Newfoundland. He is already very late, and the French generally finish fishing there about 20 Aug.

Sir George Rooke to Hedges.
Becalmed. Has given orders to ship the forces at Plymouth on the Monmouth and bring them to the fleet. Will dispose them as well as he can. Hopes to meet the Swiftsure with the empty transports. Will now sail westward to the rendezvous. The hot weather is causing sickness on board.

NOTTINGHAM to ————.

Queen's command:—That before you issue warrant to execute the sentence on Ireland, Hitchman and Burgess, who have been condemned for piracy, their several cases be laid before her Majesty by you or the judges who tried them.

GEORGE CLARKE to NOTTINGHAM.

Sends the names* of some English subjects now on board the Brill (Captain Billiard), who desire to be discharged from the service of the States General. Their names are sent so that the Secretary of State may get their discharges from the "Embassadors" of Holland now here.

NOTTINGHAM to the LORD KEEPER.

The Queen thinks it right that something should, as usual, be said to the Judges before they go the circuits. If therefore your lordship will consider of the matters proper to be recommended to you (and the Queen's Speech to Parliament may suggest proper topics) and can come to the Committee at my office to-morrow morning, the matter can be arranged before the meeting of the great Council.

6 July.

HEDGES to the PRINCE'S COUNCIL.

The Queen, on information from Plymouth, desires you to get the names of the French Protestants, prisoners there, who are said to have applied to be allowed to serve in her fleet, and that such as can satisfy his Royal Highness that they really are Protestants, or have been forced to change their religion and now desire to profess the Protestant faith, may be employed on board her Majesty's ships. Care must be taken that, on the discharge of any ship on which they are permitted to serve, they do not return to France. Inform his Royal Highness.

JOSIAH BURCHETT to NOTTINGHAM.

Sir John Munden desires that the master of the smack mentioned in his letter may be hastened to Spithead. Pray send him, as all other matters are now ready for the trial.

J. Tucker to [Hedges].

Details. To-day a Dutch post came in with letters of the 3rd instant. The news was as in the enclosed prints. Lord Marlborough says he does not know the Mr. Butler you mentioned to be Lieutenant-Governor of Tilbury, but he consents to the Prince being moved on his behalf. He will be appointed.

Details.

An express came in this afternoon from the fleet and brought a letter for you from Sir G. Rooke. I took it to Lord Nottingham, who read it and said he would lay it before the Committee, which meets to-morrow. It says that on the 5th at 9 a.m. the fleet were off Plymouth, standing to westward, and that the hot weather began to make the ships unhealthy. The Queen still intends to go to Windsor on Thursday. I will try to wait on you there on Friday.

Nottingham to the Commissioners for Sick and Wounded.

The Committee of Council think it right that in future all French prisoners should be examined as to the condition of the French fleet, and an account be sent to the Secretaries. They also desire you to hire private lodgings for the French officers lately ordered up from Portsmouth, and to procure sentries to stand at their doors and prevent them from escaping. They would have the prisoners at Portsmouth removed to Southampton and Winchester unless, or until, Portchester Castle is ready for them. No pen, ink or paper to be allowed them without leave.

ROYAL WARRANTS to the LORD LIEUTENANT OR CHIEF GOVERNOR OF IRELAND.

1. We hear that the regiment now in Jamaica which was under the command of the late Brigadier Selwyn*, deceased, is charged with 1,000l. for provisions supplied to them when they were starting for the West Indies; and that during the late war all provisions delivered to the forces that were transported to foreign parts were given to the regiments and not charged to their accounts; and we are asked that "in consideration of the dearness of provisions and all other necessaries in the said island" the said 1,000l. may not be placed to the regiment's account. It appears by a certificate of Thomas, Lord Coningsby, Paymaster-General of the Forces in Ireland, that 1,000l. was paid to Bartholomew van Homrigh and laid out in provisions for the regiment, and charged to their account pursuant to a warrant from the late Lords Justices of Ireland. We authorise you to give the necessary orders for discharging the regiment of this liability for 1,000l. and for placing it to the account of our revenue at large in Ireland.

2. The case of the arrears due to the Earl of Drogheda's late regiment has been laid before us. It appears that the regiment was disbanded in April, 1698, and the men fully clothed and the undertakers paid for clothing by an assignment on eighteen months' off-reckonings, ending 1 October, 1697. The off-reckonings from 1 October, 1697, to April, 1698, amounted to 757l. 17s. 5½d., and are detained in our Paymaster-General's hands, and the Earl prays they may be paid out to him. William Robinson, Esq., Deputy-Paymaster of our Forces in Ireland, certifies that the regiment was cleared to 1 October, 1697, and soon after received complete new clothing and accoutrements, which were paid for out of the said off-reckonings, and the off-reckonings of the said regiment growing due from that time were laid by to supply future clothing; that the regiment was broke on 14 and 15 April, 1698, and, on stating its arrears it appeared that there remained in the Treasury (over and above the officers' clearings) 757l. 17s. 5½d., being so much laid by to provide future clothing, and that payment of it was refused to the said Earl because the same was saved out of the twopence a day taken from the soldiers for clothing them. The money shall be paid to the Earl, but he shall be answerable to the officers and soldiers of the said regiment for such of the money as shall appear to be due to any of them. Give directions accordingly.
P. 1. Ibid, pp. 21, 22.

3. The Judges in Ireland propose, through you, that an allowance might be made to the Marshal of the Four Courts in Ireland to enable him to perform his duties. You report that this office was formerly a profitable one until the fees attached to it were reduced by Act of Parliament, that the office is important and that when it was lately vacant owing to the removal of the holder of it for “often and heinous misbehaviour,” you were unable to fill it owing to the inadequacy of the emoluments attached to it. The Judges say that the charge of the Marshal amounts to 159l. a year, and that the fees of the said office, since they were reduced by the late Act of Parliament, have not exceeded 120l. a year, taking one year with another, which, if made up to 400l. a year, might tempt a competent person to accept the office, to which many hazards are attached.

Give orders for a payment of 280l. a year to our said Marshal, to be placed on the Civil establishment from Midsummer last, so as to make up his salary to 400l. a year.

P. 1. S.P. Signet Office 15, pp. 84, 85.

4. Great Seal (letters as advised by counsel) revoking the appointment of William Burgh as Comptroller-General and Accountant-General in Ireland and re-appointing him to those offices. To exercise the office by himself or a deputy or deputies approved by you. His present fees &c. to continue. Favourable clauses.

8 July. Sir George Rooke to Nottingham.

I have seized a Spanish ghabarre* which came into the fleet on Sunday last, though she had the Queen’s pass, countersigned by your lordship, as I thought you could not mean her to go before us. When wind is fair, I will see she has good convoy to her port, and may make some of her company useful for our service. Winds still contrary, which may be fatal to us on many accounts.

9 July. [to William Keith or Lord Blantyre.]

I only received yours to-day or would have answered sooner. I hoped to hear often from you, but knew how busy you were. I have been so fortunate as to see some of your letters, and especially that which contained the Queen’s last answer. The Duke showed it to me, and I was very pleased to see it and see how our friends praised what you had done in the affair you were entrusted with. If your enemies have made any comment on your being too “peremptor” with the Queen, I know nothing of it, but I am seldom in town and do not converse much with people of that stamp. You have certainly omitted nothing that became an honest man and a good countryman, and your friends esteem you accordingly.

“I know very well who were reckoned to be your friends at Court, but as their friendship depends more upon the emulation betwixt them and other courtiers than upon any kindness to us, I am afraid your jealousy may be but too well grounded, especially after the remarks you made and after what was told you by a man of that interest you write of; and what confirms me yet more in this opinion is that I was told by one of those gentlemen who were lately in London that notwithstanding of the fair words they got from those very statsmen you were recommended to, yet he believes they were the occasion of their not getting a better reception. . . . I believe everybody will allow this person I have it from to be a man of a very good understanding.

"But how Sund[erland?] should interpose to our disadvantage is what may be very true, but there seems to be such a mystery in that affair that I don't know what to think of it, and therefore I choose rather to say nothing till it come further to light; but I thank you for the hint, which afterwards perhaps may serve to unridge what otherways perhaps could not be understood."

Your bad reception was very ill taken here, and there seemed to be a great ferment in the nation at the news of it. This was like to have been heightened by an overture which was brought into the Parliament, of which you have no doubt heard all the steps. It was thought to have been wisely set at rest by an adjournment, which has quieted people's minds a little. We all now expect this Parliament to be dissolved. I hope your affairs will allow you to be down before the time of the elections, which are intended at Michaelmas.

You need not be surprised at receiving letters so seldom from this, for I am informed that several letters both from you and to you have been intercepted. This is a frequent practice in this country, and for that reason I should not write to you so freely by the ordinary post as I should on this occasion. Let me now assure you that I shall "manag the confidence" you are pleased to put in me with that reserve that you will never regret having given it; and as you have trusted me with a matter which you would not have entrusted to any other, I shall be careful not to disappoint your opinion of me.

I need not tell you to speak of nothing in this that should not be known.

I shall not fail to tell the Duke the first time I see him of your desire to serve him. Pitcurr is now at home and I shall write and tell him why it is he has not heard from you.

As for "this young spark" he has lived with me very discreetly and has shewn a readiness on all occasions to do everything he was desired to do; insomuch that, if he had been my own servant he could not have been more willing. He has given no trouble. To-morrow I am to send him away on a little horse of my own to Newcastle, and my servant will put him into the Newcastle coach on Monday, if there is room; and, if so, he will get safely to London. I have given him 4 guineas and 8 English crowns which, in our money, amounts to 82l. 16s. 0d. Scots. According to the expense of the journey, as I have calculated it, this sum will more than suffice for him.

I shall be very grateful if you will take the trouble to write occasionally and tell us what is passing. In return I will try to let you hear anything you wish from this. All our great ministers of State are making ready to "pursue" from this immediately, but, I hear, will soon return. The Duke of Argyle is gone already and is to stay for some time on the way. The Marquis of Annandale and Lord Seafield [have gone?]. You may hear of more before this reaches you.

I could not find a better way to send your boy than by coach. The seas are so infested with privateers that there is no going without a convoy, and this is hard to get to London.

I hope you will come down here before the elections, but I know that a young man "who understands how to recommend himself" will find it hard "to quit the beauties of so fine a place and the pleasures you can hardly fail of finding out to yourself."

The Duke of Hamilton to William Keith or Keeth.

I have yours of the 4th with Lord Blantyre's postscript. I have come hither to keep our fast in good company, and can assure you that all our friends are very pleased with your part and only sorry that, after the Queen showed so much dislike to our address, she should have been importuned any more upon the subject. As you have found, steps have been taken, but no advance has been made, though you have given a copy of the address, which, as there was so little chance of its being received, our friends here think was scarcely necessary; but they realise that there may have been grounds for this which we, at this distance, do not appreciate. I now think that you and Lord Blantyre should return here as there is nothing there for you to do in relation to your friends here; so I think you should take special care of the principal address. I wish that had been sooner done by bringing it hither, and have always wished so. When he leaves, I hope he will ask Lady Marlborough if she has any answer to what I wrote her by him.

Nottingham's Letters.

1. To the Earl of Abingdon.

The Queen has signed all the commissions for the Tower except that of Mr. D'Oyley for major. She knows this was promised to you, but she is in some difficulty because it appears that Mr. Soul, who now has the post, bought it, and is poor, and has a wife and three children, "which has so moved her Majesty's charity" that you will do her a great service if you release her from her promise to you and let Soul have his commission renewed. I presume you will agree to this unless Soul is quite unfit for the post.

2. To the Lord Keeper.

The Judges were not called to attend her Majesty in Council to-day; but she thinks you should, as usual, call them to you and acquaint them with the things of which your lordship has prepared some heads, and which they should recommend in their charges in the several places of their Circuits.

Has Lord Carbury been made Custos Rotulorum as before? Mr. Banaster has been recommended for the Welsh Judge's place—you know by whom. I don't know him, or whether the patent has been passed to any other.

The Queen has given 40l. to William Houston and Henry Matier between them, and directs me to let you know that you may give order accordingly.

4. To the Earl of Marlborough.

Queen's command:—On consideration she does not think it right to grant to Aldborough the carriages which they ask, or to refit them; but if they will provide carriages to remount their guns, she will allow them twelve barrels of powder and shot in proportion. Give order accordingly.

10 July. Edward Morgan to Hedges.

There is a patent in being which should bring in the Crown 700l. a year and is let to farm for 2,500l. It is of long standing but is not valid, for a defect in drawing. It is not proposed to divert the intent of the patent by vacating it; but you, and others who would farm under you, might gain if it were vacated, and you had a grant from the Queen for the same.

This may be done if you procure the reversion. Then the present holder may, if you think fit, be secured the present income for the remaining term, and you may have [a] longer [term] added for yourself.

The present advantage I can demonstrate will be worth 1,000l. per annum without any trouble or charge; and much more with it. What it will be worth afterwards shews itself.

I propose this method because it is in powerful hands who will otherwise oppose you in it, but will not oppose if not damaged, and when they see their defect in title.

Encloses a memorial from Mr. Dymoke, that his Royal Highness may give such directions thereon as he thinks fit.

Note that Mr. Dymoke's memorial sets forth that the coast of Lincolnshire is much troubled by privateers. Asks for a convoy to lie off the Humber mouth "or about Saltfleet, Thedlethorpe or thereabouts."

2. To Same.

By order:—Sends a memorial from the Commissioners of Prizes, which has been before the Lords of the Council. The Lords think that if some severity be not used at first in cases of this nature there can be no great advantages expected to her Majesty from the prizes.

Note.—The Commissioners represent that there were muslins and calicoes (bought in Holland for 1,300 livres) on board the Citadelle of Bayonne, taken by Captain Maurice, commander of the Newport, and also a pipe of fine flax, which the captors shared amongst themselves. Several letters, papers of consequence, and the master's pocket-book have been withheld and not sent to the Admiralty.

3. To the Attorney General.

I send papers from Sir Hugh Everard. Give order for the prosecution of Bryant alias Harris and certify what further is fit to be done in the matter.

Note that Sir Hugh certified he had committed Bryant or Harris to Chelmsford jail as a cheat and deserter. He tried to avoid service by pretending he had had his arm shot off, and forged two medical certificates and the signature of the Mayor of Harwich.

1. To the Prince's Council.

I remind you to propose instructions for Sir C. Shovell's sailing &c. and for providing bomb-vessels, as was proposed at a meeting last night.

2. To Sir Cloudesley Shovell.

4. To Sir George Rooke.
   I have been to visit my boroughs of Malmesbury and Calne in Wilts and, on my return, received yours of the 5th, 7th and 8th. I am sorry you were forced back by contrary winds before you cleared the channel. The transport ships have fared as badly as you have. They are safe, and will join you as soon as weather permits. Next week I shall send you instructions to leave some of your great ships behind, and will give Mr. Tucker orders to send you all news while you are away, as often as he can.

Colonel Collier to [Nottingham].

Yours of the 22nd. I shall as soon as the wind serves release the men and boat which brought the English merchants from St. Malo.
   I hear people are applying to the Queen for this Lieutenant Governor's place. I hope the Queen will not turn me out, as I have, I know, always given satisfaction; but, not knowing what some may say, I send a memorandum shewing my service &c. in the last 36 years. Pray read it and, if you think well, acquaint her Majesty with its contents.
   Enclosing:—

The remonstrance of Colonel Thomas Collier, Lieutenant Governor of Jersey, shewing that:—

His father was a younger brother of the Colliers of Jairlet [Yarlet] in Staffordshire, who left his country in the Civil wars and died in Breda, where the petitioner* was born in 1646, and left, when five years old, to the care of his godfather, Sir Alexander Hume. Was brought to Court after the Restoration, served in the '66 war on the Turkey Merchant and was wounded in the leg. In '67 went to the Straights in the Pembroke (Captain "Harbert," now Earl of "Thorington"). Had two engagements with the Dutchmen, in the last of which he was blown up. Returned with the said "Harbord" in the Constant Warwick. In '69 he went to Tangier on board the Mary Rose (Admiral Kempthorn), having on board Lord Howard, going ambassador to the King of Morocco. Had an engagement with a Turk's man-of-war; all of which the books will show. In 1672 Sir Alexander Hume* recommended him in Holland. Carried arms in Erskyn's company of Colonel Zoble's regiment. Was at the sieges of Maestricht and the Grave. Became ensign by commission dated 12 February, 1676[7]. Fought at St. Thomas and St. Dennis, where his leg was shot to pieces. Became lieutenant then [?] and captain in Feb., 1687[8]. In August [1688] was changed to Sir H. Bellasis' regiment to make room for the now Colonel Gibson.

Was aide-de-camp to General Douglas in the Boyne campaign, and after the first siege of Athlone became major (commissioned 10 October, 1690, in Babington's regiment). At the taking of Limerick was major of the brigade, the Prince of Hesse [being?] colonel of the regiment. At Steenkirk, the Prince being absent, he was made lieutenant-colonel (commission August 1, 1692). Commanded the regiment from that time till the late King gave it to the Marquis de Rada, notwithstanding petitioner's earnest solicitations. This disappointment did not prevent him from attending General Talmach to Brest, who assured him from the King that he should have the first regiment vacant. After the action at Cambret [Cambrai], the burning of Dipe [Dieppe] and finishing the campaign in Flanders he had leave to return to England. He asked for New England, but the King refused it to him, but gave him the lieutenant governorship of Jersey, with a colonel's title (commission dated 12 March, 169[3]), 300l. a year, and leave to keep his company. Petitioner never asked for Jersey, and, since then, has often begged better employ.

Has always served well. Lost his son in service in Ireland. Has seven more children (five very young), who depend on him. Hopes he will not be superseded unless better provided for. Nothing against him that he was born in Breda, since all born of English parents during that rebellion were naturalised.

A. Vice-Admiral Benbow to the Governor of Havana.

The King of England tells me that he has lent the great fleet of England to the Emperor to transport his son the Archduke of Austria with 40,000 men into Spain, where he is confident he will be received as lawful King without any bloodshed or opposition, being well assured that nineteen parts of twenty in Spain "languish with impatience for the happy opportunity, having already had a taste of the French yoke and being sensible of the difference betwixt being a province to France (as in effect the Spanish dominions now is) and living under the lenity of the House of Austria." I have no doubt but that in a short time I shall hear that this has been successfully effected; and as success in Europe is certain I am ordered to offer my ships and men to help such of the Governors of the Spanish Indies as are early in their service for the Austrian King, and want it towards their support and assistance in delivering their country from slavery. I will say no more except that so long as there is a ship or man in my master's Indies they will be used to help so just a cause. I know the French at Madrid have been trying to instil the poison of dissension and procure us unfriendly offices from Spanish Governors, but hope that I shall find they have failed and that we shall be good friends.

b. Vice-Admiral Benbow to Josiah Burchett.

Sends foregoing and acknowledges letters up to 14 Feb., received on 12 May. Proceeds:—I sailed on the 8th from here with a desire to seek for M. Chateau-Renault, but returned, after meeting Captain Whetstone, to deliver to the Governor some orders I had received from the [late] King and the Lords Justices, leaving the Falmouth, Ruby and Experiment, to cruise for news off Petit Guava, but as carefully as if at war. I hope to sail in two or three days and have a design for Logan [Leogane], and shall do my best to put their lordships' orders in execution. The ships with me are the Bredah, Defiance, Canterbury, Dunkirk, Dreadnought, Windsor, Gloucester, Kingston, Greenwich, Colchester, Bristol, Scarborough, Seahorse, Strombilo fireship [?] and Carcas bomb. I hope to join the other three to them.

We lose a great many men daily by the distemper of the country. Our provisions expend apace; and, without them, we can do nothing. I will careen no more ships till I see how the land lies.

On 27 March seventeen tall ships past by Little Camana going for the west end of Cuba. This may be part of Chateau-Renault's squadron; and, if so, they are probably going to Havana to offer their convoy to the flota. Had we strength to follow them we should leave this island to the mercy of the other part of his squadron, which I judge to be at Logan [Leogane]. If so I hope to see them soon, and if God gives us success I hope the Spaniards in these parts will soon be brought over to the House of Austria and relinquish that of Bourbon, "but before this be done there must be set up one of the Austrian family in Old Spain, for they will be very cautious to declare without a certainty."

c. Same to Same.

The above is a duplicate of my last; since which I hear that on the 12th of May Chateau-Renault was at Havanna with eighty-six French men-of-war, who daily waited for the flota from La Vera Cruz, expecting to convoy them to Europe. I have not strength to prevent them, neither have we provisions to proceed with our undertaking. The Gloucester and Seahorse sailed on 25 May for Carthagena with a letter to the Governor, a copy of which is enclosed. One of the same tenor I sent to the Havana, and likewise intend another to the Viceroy of Mexico.

"The Government of this island now is entirely in the hands of the planters, who mind nothing but getting estates, and when so to go off, having no regard to the King's interest or subjects, for at this time we can hardly get fresh provisions to support our sick, the ships and soldiers being a great burden to them, as they say, and wish they had never come into these parts. The inhabitants are grown very rich and value themselves for being judges and parties in making and executing their own laws; they do whatever the desire of gain leads them to without any regard to the laws of our country. These violent proceedings cannot continue long. If they do, this island must be ruined, and not be remedied unless they be conformable to our English laws and have a Governor who is neither planter nor merchant but such as will propagate the King's interest and security of his subjects."

If the Spaniards will put themselves under the French convoy, they may, I think, sail from Havana at the end of June. I thought it my duty to despatch the Trial long boat with this news, that such measures as are thought most proper may be timely taken.

The Scarborough is now careening and will go home soon. She has been here twelve months. The Bristol is in harbour repairing the knee of her head, which is so defective that I shall have to send her home. I have not had my health since I came here, and should like to come home if I can do so without prejudice to the service.

Our squadron will cruise off the east end of this island for the health of our men.

12 July. Instructions to Sir George Rooke.

If you and the Duke of Ormond have any success against Cadiz or Gibraltar and a Council of War consisting of land and sea general officers think it right to leave ships there for defence of what has been conquered, you may leave there such of our ships as you think proper for the defence of the place. If the season of the year is so far advanced that you do not think it right for the great ships to return into England, you may leave such of them there as you think fit, giving notice to one of the Secretaries of State, care being already taken to send out naval stores and what is needed to fit those ships for service next spring.

General date, 13 July.

DOCUMENTS relating to the COURT-MARTIAL on SIR JOHN MUNDEN, held at Spithead.

Minutes of the Court-martial held on board the Queen, as above.
Present: Sir Cloudesly Shovell, Admiral of the White, President; Captains Mings, J. Leake, Coale, Kerr, Good, Stewart, Maine, Greenhill, J. Crowe, Clarke, L. Crowe, Littleton, Swanton, Cooper, Turvill, Bridges, Maynard and Hollyman.
All were duly sworn pursuant to a late Act of Parliament &c.

Pursuant to an order from the Lord High Admiral a strict inquiry was made into the conduct of Sir John Munden, Rear-Admiral of the Red, during the late expedition near the Groyne on the coast of Galicia in May last. The question was whether he (being sent with a squadron of her Majesty's ships to intercept a French squadron and transports bound for the Groyne, or to burn or destroy them there in case he should find them and it were practicable) was guilty of ill conduct and mismanagement in several particulars especially in the following particulars:—

1. That after he had got intelligence of the enemy's fleet being daily expected he, on May 27, stood off 10 leagues or more from the land, by which means the enemy's ships passed by his squadron and got into the Groyne.

The Court strictly examined the journals of the commanders and other officers of that squadron. It appeared by the general computation that the ships were about three leagues off the shore of Cape Prior at nine at night when they stood off, and about seven leagues off in the morning, when they tacked and stood in. As it was heavy weather and there was no anchoring on that coast, and as Cape Ortugall (the station they were making for) was a proper place for intercepting the enemy, and as he had ordered his scouts to be in a proper position for giving him notice of the enemy, the Court is of opinion that Sir John Munden was not guilty of mismanagement or neglect of duty on this particular head.

2. The second charge against him is that he did not follow the ships that he saw going into the Groyne and try to destroy them.

The Court duly weighed the motives which induced the Vice-Admiral and the captains at their consultation to desist from attempting the said ships in the harbour, and consider that, in view of the difficulty of getting in and the strength of the place, it was not advisable or practicable to attack them after they had got into the Groyne.

3. The third charge against him is that when, on 16 May, the Salisbury was in action with a French man-of-war of about 70 guns, he called her off instead of sending some other ship to her assistance, which would probably have resulted in taking the Frenchman.

Sir John Munden sets forth that the ship which the Salisbury was chasing stood right with them, and that accordingly he had hopes of her falling in with them by the course she steered, which induced him to make the signal to desist from the chase, but that when he perceived the Salisbury to be engaged he stood to her assistance with the whole squadron, and so continued to do till they had made the land. Not being able to come up with her, he followed his instructions by keeping himself as much undiscovered as he could, in order to gain intelligence of the enemy. The Court having heard this explanation, which was confirmed by the other officers, considered it satisfactory.

4. The fourth charge against him is for setting ashore Spanish prisoners who might have been exchanged for Englishmen now in captivity at the Groyne.

It appeared to the Court that all the Spanish people taken were women and indigent people, and none of them were military persons. They therefore think the Vice-Admiral was not to blame on this head.

The Court therefore think that Sir John Munden has cleared himself of all charges brought against him, and has complied with his instructions and behaved with great zeal and diligence in the service; and acquits him of all charges.

A. Note on the position of Munden's fleet on 28 May, 1702.

Gives the position of the Salisbury and Dolphin and their movements after making out a squadron of nine ships off Cape Prior.

b. Depositions of Henry Ward and John Price, on board the Lancaster at Spithead, 2 July, 1702.

Ward is first lieutenant of her Majesty's ship Lancaster, and says on oath:—

He sailed for the coast of Galicia in the Lancaster under Sir John Munden. They weighed from St. Helen's on 10 May last. Made the coast of Galicia on the 15th and supposed it to be Cape Ortugall. From thence till the 27th they stood one way or another. The Salisbury brought in a barque and shallop on the morning of the 27th with men and women. On the evening of the 27th they stood in till about 9 o'clock in the morning and then tacked and stood off till 4 in the morning and then stood in again for the land. Moderate weather. Details as to wind.

At 8 o'clock, having been off duty, deponent came on deck again and, a little after 8 o'clock, they saw some ships; but, as he was between decks making a clear ship for battle, deponent can give no good account of their number. The signal was made for a line of battle and they set their topgallant sails and all the sail they could, and signal was made for the Salisbury and Dolphin to bear down, they being then to windward of the squadron. Interrogated, he believes the ships they saw were about four or five leagues from them when they first saw them, and were to leeward of them. Does not think they were ever less than three leagues from those ships. They chased the Frenchmen till after 11 o'clock, but could not overtake them and so gave up the chase and lay by. They saw the Castle salute French.

* The following documents were collected from different places in S.P. Dom., Naval 6, and, as they deal with the same matter, placed together by me for convenience.—R.P.M.

A signal was then made to board the flag[ship] for a consultation of captains. At 9 p.m. that night they made sail for the northward. The same evening the Salisbury was sent in for the shore with the prisoners which had been taken in the boat two days before.

Pp. 1\s. Signed (copy) and with copy of note that it was sworn before me, V. Bathurst, Judge Advocate.

Deposition of John Price.

He is master of the Lancaster, and says on oath:—

Corroborates generally the foregoing. He cannot say for certain with what kind of ship the Salisbury was engaged, but judged her a bigger ship than the Salisbury, which was engaged about noon and returned to the squadron in the evening with her topmast damaged. Corroborates foregoing as to the movements of the fleet on the night of 27 May. Agrees with foregoing as to the pursuit of the French ships with all sail set, but says his own ship was never nearer than three leagues to the French. Interrogated, he says he believes they were about nine leagues from the land when they first saw the French ships. They had made a clear ship on the Lancaster the day before they saw the French ships, and were ready to engage, but, after chasing till 11 a.m. on the morning of the 28th they saw the said ships go into the Groyne, and so gave up the chase. Corroborates foregoing as to the Council of War and standing out to sea.

Pp. 1\s. Signed (copy) by Price and with note (copy) as foregoing. In all pp. 31\s. S.P. Dom., Naval 6, 116B.

c. Depositions of James Knowles and Gilbert Evans.

Taken on board her Majesty's ship Dolphin at Spithead on 3 July, 1702.

Knowles is lieutenant of her Majesty's ship Dolphin, and says on oath:—

Corroborates the first portion of the two foregoing. Deponent in the grey of the morning of 27 May went in on the Dolphin, together with the Salisbury, towards the Groyne to get intelligence. He went in the Dolphin's boat, to intercept anything coming out. Went in shore and rowed within a pistol shot of the mud fort on the larboard side going into the Groyne. He saw no guns at all on it. They could not discern the strength of the castle of Corunna, but they saw into the harbour and could see three men-of-war in it. The flag had intelligence of the Duke of Albequerque's being there with about 2,000 "Landellens" and heard that they expected some French men-of-war. They were then ordered, with the Salisbury, to keep to windward [on] the 28[th], so they did not see the enemy's ships. On the Admiral's hoisting a red flag they returned in the afternoon.

About 6 o'clock Captain Cotton was sent in with the prisoners they had taken and they lay by till he returned, and that night they made sail from the coast and stood westward.

Pp. 1½. Signed (copy) and with note (copy) as foregoing.
Deposition of Gilbert Evans taken &c. as foregoing.
Evans is master of the Dolphin and says on oath:—
Confirms generally the foregoing deposition. When going in to scout, the Dolphin's boat took and brought out with her a Spanish boat with several prisoners, whom the commander, Captain Soanes, carried on board the flag. Says that the morning of May 28 was hazy, which prevented their own ship from seeing the French ships. About 8 a.m. he saw the flag[ship] have all the sail she could make, and there was a signal made for line of battle. Other details.

Pp. 1½. Signed (copy) and with copy of note that it was sworn in Court, signed by the Judge Advocate. In all pp. 3. Endd.
S.P. Dom., Naval 6, 116c.

D. Depositions of Nicholas Stiles and others, taken on board her Majesty's ship Queen on 13 July, 1702.

Nicholas Stiles on oath says:—
Is master of the John and Susan smack. Saw the signal out off [i.e. to call off] the Salisbury from the chase of a French man-of-war she was engaged with. Cannot add to foregoing. Knows that Nicholas Cadbury kept a journal, which was carried ashore at Falmouth.

P. ¾. Copy, with copy of note as in Gilbert Evans' deposition above.

Nicholas Cadbury on oath says:—
Is midshipman of the Lancaster. Saw the signal made for the Salisbury to give over chase. Believes they were about ten leagues from the land the morning they saw the French ships. They were in distress in the smack when the squadron left them and took no care of them.

P. ¾. Copy, with note (copy) as foregoing.

Captain Cotton of the Salisbury on oath says:—
He had the smack, alleged to be in distress, in tow till she threw off her tow, when he stood by her all night. The rest of the squadron lay by most of the night, mainly on her account.

P. ¾. Copy, with copy of note; "Declared in Court." Signed (copy) by the Judge Advocate.

John Wye on oath says:—
Is boatswain's mate of the Lancaster. Belonged to the packet-boats and has often been into the Groyne. Does not believe it to be of so great strength as Gilbert Dobson affirms. Deponent offered Sir John Munden to carry the ships into 16 or 18 fathoms of water out of gunshot. Interrogated, he saw the fortifications were increased the last time he was there. Cannot give any account of the present condition of the place.

P. ¾. Copy, with copy note as in Cadbury's deposition above.

To the last deposition Sir John Munden said that he did not think it wise to rely on Wye's statement, as Dobson had been at Corunna more recently than Wye. Captain Cotton said he was within Cape Prior a great way, but was glad to get out as soon as he could, having 39 fathoms of water and foul ground. The ships were continually in danger of fouling.

e. Examination as to Sir John Munden's distance from the shore on 27 and 28 May.

The Court considered carefully how far off Sir John's squadron was from the shore when it stood off on May 27 in the evening, and how far off when it stood on on the morning of the 28th.

The evidence of various witnesses, which conflicted, was considered.

Gives the names of various persons examined and of the distance to which they spoke. These vary from 4 leagues to 13 or 14 leagues [details].

The officers of the Russell declared in Court that they had orders to tack in as soon as it was well day, and did so at 3 a.m.

Pp. 1¾. Copy, dated 13 July, on board the Queen, with copy of note of declaration in Court, signed by Bathurst. Endd. Ibid, 116e.

f. Resolution of a Council of War held on board the Russell, four leagues N.W. from Cape Prior, 28 May, 1702.

We heard from a French merchantman from Rochelle that there were twelve men-of-war at Rochelle ready to sail for the Groyne with the first wind, whereof one was of seventy guns and one of fifty, and that the Faulcon, formerly an English man-of-war, was coming to the Groyne before them. The Spaniards taken from the shore said that the Duke of Albequerque was there with 2,000 soldiers, and that there were already three French men-of-war there, each with fifty guns, and that twelve more were expected from Rochelle. It was therefore thought well to cruise to windward off Cape Ortegall to intercept the ships if they should come. Relates the discovery of the French ships at dawn on the 28th, the ineffectual pursuit and the escape of the French into the Groyne.

Proceeds:—As we could not enter the Groyne and can do no service here, it was resolved to proceed to our station in the Soundings in order to protect the trade of the Queen's subjects.

Pp. 2¾. Dated on board the Russell, four leagues N.W. from Cape Prior, May 28, 1702, with note that it was signed by all the captains. Endd. Ibid, 116f.

g. Extract of a letter from Plymouth, dated 9 June, 1702.

Relates briefly the general object of Sir John Munden's voyage to the Groyne, the failure to intercept the French ships and the return to the Soundings.

P. ¾. Noted, "A copy," followed by:— 1702.

Copy of a letter from Falmouth, dated 13 June, 1702.

The sailors on the Susan and John tender bring in an account of the fleet under Admiral Munden in circumstances which seem so strange that I thought it well to obtain and transmit to you a copy of the journal kept on board the tender in material particulars. The conduct of the Admiral raises a charge of mismanagement on the following heads:—That the great "ships" engaged by the Salisbury might have been taken had one or more ships of force been ordered as well as the Salisbury for the chase; that if the fleet had kept closer in, or turned in earlier, the French fleet and store-ships must have been taken or destroyed, and that Captain Green and other English prisoners now at Corunna might be exchanged for the Spanish men and women taken.

gg. Journal kept on board the John and Susan tender.

At 11 p.m. the John and Susan tender, Nicholas Stiles master, came in from tending the Russell, under the command of Sir John Munden. On the 15th the Humber and Salisbury were ordered to chase, but were immediately recalled. On the 16th the Salisbury chased and came up with a Frenchman supposed to be a ship of about 70 guns [details], but after a short engagement was ordered off, by which means the Frenchman escaped. The Salisbury had three sailors wounded and the main topmast shot. Relates the capture on May 26 of a small French ship from Rochelle for Oporto, the news obtained from her of the impending arrival of the French squadron, and the subsequent standing off to windward of Cape Prior in a N.E. or E.N.E. wind, by which the French ships got through into the Groyne.

ii. Deposition of Charles Drew, taken on the 30th June on the Dolphin at Spithead.

Deponent is quartermaster of the Dolphin and says on oath:—

About eight years since he belonged to the packet-boat that plied between Falmouth and the Groyne called the Spanish Alliance. There were then no guns planted on what they call the mud fort. Deponent was within pistol shot of the place when sent in for intelligence by order of Sir John Munden, and saw there were now no guns on the said place. When he was there they reckoned that there were about 70 guns on the starboard side of the place and about 14 or 16 on the larboard; but to the best of his belief not many of the guns on the starboard end could be brought to bear on any ships that should come in for the Groyne. He can give no account of what alterations are since made there nor of the present condition of the place. Keeps no journal and cannot give any accurate account of the late expedition to the Groyne, except that no attempt was made on the French ships after they had got in there.

J. Declaration of Captain Isaac Townsend, on board her Majesty's ship Russell, in Portsmouth Harbour, made on June 30, 1702.

He is commander of the Russell. Relates the starting of the expedition to the Groyne. The reason why the Humber and Salisbury were called off whilst chasing a Frenchman on May 14 was that the chase was leading them out of the way. On the 15th, about 9.30 a.m., they deemed themselves near the coast of Galicia and sent on the Salisbury to make the land. She encountered and pursued and fought a French ship, in spite of the usual signal to retire, a gun twice fired by the flagship. The Salisbury in the end bore off because her main topmast was shot about one-third through.

Relates further the despatch of the Dolphin and Salisbury in-shore to get intelligence, the news brought by them on May 22 through a merchant from Martenico, the efforts of the commander to prevent the presence of his fleet from being discovered. The general effect of the declaration is that the squadron kept far from the shore in order to avoid discovery and that a good lookout was kept for the Frenchmen.

Pp. 4\frac{1}{2}. Copy, with copies of signature and of certificate of Judge Advocate Bathurst that it was declared in Court on July 13, 1702. Ibid, 116r.

This concludes the documents relating to this case.*

NOTTINGHAM'S LETTERS.

1. To the Commissioners for Sick and Wounded.

Yours of the 13th. The Lords of the Committee allow the Count de Mornay and M. Graton to go abroad occasionally to take the air, but with a guard with them, who must be careful not to suffer any person to have any conversation with them.
You may, in obedience with his Royal Highness' directions, write to M. de Maran, Lieutenant-General of Marine at Dunkirk.
If you can hire Fort Cæsar Castle for 50l. a year or less, it will be allowed. Make as good a bargain as you can.
P. \(\frac{1}{4}\). _S.P. Dom., Entry Book_ 104, p. 77.

2. To Same.

I send a letter which has been laid before the Lords of the Committee concerning the desire of the French prisoners at Dover to be allowed to work on the harbour there.
P. \(\frac{1}{4}\), with _note_ that enclosure came from Mr. Breton. _Ibid_.

3. To Major-General Trelawney.

Yours of the 5th only came to hand yesterday. While you have only so small a garrison, my Lords do not think your men need do duty on the island.

4. To Dr. Bramston.
Sends a letter from Mr. Larkin at Antigua. Desires a report on Churchill’s case.
P. ¼. S.P. Dom., Entry Book 104, p. 78. Enclosing:—

George Larkin to the Earl of Manchester.

From Annapolis in Maryland in December last I gave Sir Chas. Hedges an account that I had waited some few days at Philadelphia in hopes of meeting Churchill and How, two persons who had been convicted of piracy at the Old Baily with Kidd, and who gave out that they had given the Keeper of Newgate 300 guineas for leave to come to that part of the world to take up some money which they had hidden before they were apprehended. I was informed that Churchill had taken up 800l. and How 1,500l. I met Churchill by accident at Barbados, had him arrested and seized about 100l.
worth of his effects, which are now in the custody of the Judge of the Admiralty of that place. To prevent any charge that may happen to the Crown or island by his being detained in that place pending the Queen’s pleasure, I have acquainted the Council of Barbados that the best place to confiné him is aboard the man-of-war attending on that Government, where he may do service for his provisions.
I have settled the forms of proceeding for trial of pirates with the Commissioners here agreeably to that Act of Parliament.

14 July. Whitehall.

Hedges to the Attorney General.
The Lords of the Committee of Council desire your attendance between 10 and 11 a.m. to-morrow at my Lord Nottingham’s office. Meantime they desire you to consider the enclosed extract of a memorial touching the remittance of money into Italy for the use of the French by English merchants, and to let them have your opinion what may legally be done for prevention thereof.

14 July. Royal.

SIR GEORGE ROOKE to NOTTINGHAM.

Sailing westward on a N.E. wind, and hope it will take us out of the Channel. Hope ships from Portland Road will join us before we get out of it.

14 July. Transport Office.

COMMISSIONER ATKINSON to the COMMITTEE OF COUNCIL.
The beds arrived at Portsmouth on the 3rd. The Grand Fleet sailed on the 1st, and two ships, which Mr. Roope took up by order of the Duke of Ormond, on the 2nd. Other details.
Mr. Roope expects a convoy will soon be sent to bring a Dutch ship with soldiers on from Portsmouth to Torbay; and he will make use of such convoy to send on the beds.
1702.

To-morrow the horses will have been three weeks aboard ship and will have consumed so much of their provisions. If your lordships think that, in view of possible further delay, they should be recruited with provisions, Mr. Roope, who is at Portsmouth, can see to it.

14 July.
Off Tinmouth Bar.
CAPTAIN URRY to [JOSIAH BURCHETT ?].

On 1 July I was in command of her Majesty's ship Sheerness, four leagues S.W. from Fair Isle, between Orkney and Shetland, and had a Scotch ship in tow. I spied four sail to windward, and one bore down on me, but "stood upon a wind again" when she found what I was. I dropped my tow and gave chase. I came up with him and fought him from four till eight, and shot away his fore-topmast. By eight o'clock my masts, yards and rigging were very much damaged, and I could not trim them and, thick weather coming up, I had to bring to to secure them and put on a new suit of sails, those I had on being all shot away. As soon as I could I plied to windward "under my courses (being what sail I could carry)" and tried to find "him" all that night and next day, but could not find him under Buckeness or elsewhere, and think "she"* is sunk, as she was much damaged in the bows. She was either a French man-of-war or a privateer from St. Malo's. I have none killed, twelve wounded, and was myself shot in the neck, "but not mortal."

JOSIAH BURCHETT to NOTTINGHAM.

In consequence of a discourse I recently had with your lordship as to what number of men would be required to man the ships with Chateau Renault,† those at Toulon and Dunkirk and the 45 said to be at Brest and elsewhere, I send you a computation which I have made on the matter.

Computation as described above.

1. Thirty-four ships with Chateau Renault.
   10 of 70 guns with 480 men each    . . . 4,800
   12 of 60 guns with 400 men each    . . . 4,800
   8 of 50 to 40 guns with 280 men each . . . 2,240
   4 of 30 guns with 200 men each      . . . 800

2. Eleven great ships at Toulon.
   8 of 100 or 90 guns with 800 men each . . . 6,400
   3 of 80 guns with 560 men each       . . . 1,680

3. At Dunkirk.
   4 of 50 guns with 280 men each      . . . 1,120
   4 of 40 guns with 240 men each      . . . 960

Total, 22,800, or, allowing 4,000 on other ships for particular services, 26,800.

* The writer refers to the ship as "he" and "she" alternately.
† Francois-Louis de Rousselet, Comte de Chateau-Regnaud. The English spell his name in many different ways; the educated writers usually giving it "Chateurennaud" or "Chateau-Renault."
4. At Brest, Port Louis &c. there are forty-five ships, five of 90 guns, seven of 80, fourteen of 70, twelve of 60 and seven of 50. These, at the same rates, will require 21,400 men to man them, so that the total of all is 48,200.

But in regard they put on board their ships at least one-third soldiers, which are included in their complements, they require no more seamen than 34,800; and to man the fleet at Brest &c. 14,667.

They may probably get this number together soon, considering the arbitrary methods they use, and the supply they may have from their privateers.

Sends an enclosure to be laid before Lord Secretary Nottingham.

A. Extract from a letter from Captain Joshu[a] Moore, commander of the Mary galley, dated Plymouth Sound, 12 July, 1702.

I arrived here last night from the Canaries with four merchants, Jos. Maxey, Pinck [or Pinch] Mead, Jirvis Read and Stephen Mith. These were all we could get hold of, there being orders from Spain about ten days before my arrival there for the seizing of all the effects of the English and Dutch. What news there was is in the enclosed letter to me from the Consul. I called in at Madeira, but had no advice of any French merchantmen or men-of-war.

P. ¼. Followed by:—

A copy of a letter from Ambrose Roope, Consul at Thennerife [Teneriffe], to Captain Moore, dated 9 June, 1702.

About the 22nd or 23rd I gave news at home of the arrival at Santa Cruz here of two ships from the Havanna. They brought news of M. Shaternoes [Chateau-Regnaud] being there with eighteen men-of-war, and that he had sent orders to the Vera Cruz to have the Spanish fleet join him at Havanna. From what I can hear they will not be there till the middle or end of this month.

On the 25th last there arrived at Santa Cruz a small tartan, with a despatch from the Court of Spain to seize on all effects belonging to the English and Dutch. This was done, although as yet no war declared. Ships from Caracas and Havana are expected here.

Opinion of the Attorney General.

After consideration I advise that the best course to take is to prosecute Harris in a court-martial appointed by the Queen or the General under the recent Act of Parliament for punishing officers or soldiers who shall mutiny or desert in England or Ireland. The Act, in so far as it provides for the prosecution of deserters, has been extended to her Majesty’s dominions elsewhere by a clause in folio 32. Its body is not restrained to deserters in England or Ireland, as the title is. The prosecution will be in the care of such persons as have the care of prosecutions before a court-martial, and the deserter may be removed from Essex by habeas corpus to take his trial.

1. To the Lord Mayor of London.

Having received many complaints of the ill-usage of her subjects in Spain, the Queen has decided to retaliate by confining the Spanish merchants here until she can have justice for her subjects in Spanish territory, according to the treaties with Spain. When you get this, inform the bearers of the names and abodes of the principal Spanish merchants in and about London, and, when the bearers have done their duty, provide sentinels (from the militia) to stand at their doors to prevent their going abroad and conveying away any part of their estates.

2. To the Recorder [of London].

Having seen your paper regarding the people condemned at the last Sessions, the Queen directs that you and the Judges who sat at the trial of Charles Cooper and Henry Baker send in a report on them, stating the facts and advising what the Queen may fitly do therein. She will then decide the question of execution or reprieve. I send you some affidavits in the matter.
1702.

The Queen is not ready to credit them where they differ from the proceedings of the Court, but thus the whole matter will be best laid before you. As to Sarah Browne, Elizabeth Harris, Deborah Smith, Martha Elton and Elizabeth Edwards, the Queen would have you insert them in the next general pardon on condition of transportation, "and that they transport themselves at their own charges; otherwise such of them as will not agree to it, or shall not perform it after they have pleaded their pardon, are then to be executed." The others are to be pardoned. The Queen is pleased to pardon Elizabeth Talbot, Anne Weaver and Elizabeth Hind. They are to be inserted in the next general pardon, and are meantime to be reprieved. Elizabeth Hind, the witness against Elizabeth Talbot, must be prosecuted for perjury.

Queen, at Spithead.

SIR CLODESLEY SHOVEL to NOTTINGHAM.

Yours of the 15th, with extracts from Benbow and from Roope at Teneriffe, received. I hardly think Chateaurenard can have thirty sail of the line; but think he must be superior to Vice-Admiral Benbow, or that officer would not have allowed him to come quietly out of the Indies. If the [French] ships that are to bring forces to the Indies once join Chateaurenau, he will have a very powerful squadron.

I send enclosed a list of all the ships that are under no present orders. The last three cannot, I fear, be manned unless some officers of the ships in port be turned over or more men arrive from other parts.

Early in the year we heard that [only] a detachment was to proceed with the soldiers, and that the Grand Fleet of fifty sail of the line was to remain in the Channel. We also expected near twenty of the Dutch. I wish I could gather thirty sail of the line together. I should then be glad to put to sea and stake my reputation "in my own country, where 'tis in more danger than in an enemy's."

I hope you will excuse my liberty if I assure you that "the misfortune and vice of our country is to believe ourselves better than other men"—which is the reason why we generally send too small a force to execute our designs; "but experience has taught me that, where men are equally injured and disciplined in war, 'tis, without a miracle, number that gains the victory; for both in fleets, squadrons and single ships of near equal force, by the time one is beaten and ready to retreat the other is also beaten and glad the enemy has left him. To fight, beat and chase an enemy of the same strength I have sometimes seen; but have rarely seen at sea any victory worth boasting when the strength has been near equal."

I am ready to do my utmost and to execute any order with hearty good will.

Enclosing:—

The list referred to above.

19 July. Walter Devereux to Nottingham.

Though I know your Lordship is very busy with State affairs, I venture to ask an answer to my communication. It is high time that care were taken to "prevent the private correspondence &c.* which." I assure your Lordship is never to be prevented so effectually as in the way I suggest. I defy all the Custom House officers in the Kingdom to lay a better way. I do not say this on my own authority, but have behind me scores of honest men, gentlemen, clergy, seafaring men, officers and others, who reside on the coast. I can have 500 more to back the same, if desired, which is more than ever was known to any method proposed or practised on the coast. I will stand to and prove every paragraph in my printed statement, which is in your Lordship's hands.

The proposal I made for raising seafaring men in Kent and Sussex cannot be carried out by the Admiralty, and I was therefore ordered by Mr. Hill to lay it before your Lordship or the Council, and willingly do this. First: The men I propose to bring in are all able and stout young men that cannot be brought into the service by pressing or any other means. Secondly, the Queen will save 20s. per man bounty money, besides conduct money. Thirdly, I will raise recruits yearly by the same method during the war if I am continued in my present employment, or have any other general employment on the coast. On a letter written by eighteen members of Parliament I was employed, by them above 18 months past and made Surveyor-General of Kent, Sussex and Hampshire for imported excisable liquors. My predecessors, as I am informed, had 300l. per annum salary. Although I have given the Commissioners all satisfaction; yet, by the prejudice of Sir Basill Dixwell and of Henry Baker, Solicitor to the Treasury, I have been prevented from getting any salary at all, though I have spent between 200l. and 300l. in their service. To shew my sincerity I am ready to go without my salary until I raise a number of men according to my proposals. This should prove to your Lordship that I can do what I proposed, so as to prevent the export of wool and "the correspondence now held &c."

19 July.

Sir George Rooke to Nottingham.

I have yours of the 15th with news from Vice-Admiral Benbow and Mr. Roope of Teneriffe. It is very unlikely that the fleets [Chateauenaud’s and the merchant fleet from the West Indies?] will meet in mid ocean, especially as it is uncertain to what port the [merchant?] ships will come. If they come under a French convoy they will hardly make for Cadiz.

Mr. Methuen had his packet and left yesterday on the Lovestoffe [Lowestoft] for Portugal.

Hedges to Sir George Rooke.

Sir Cloudesley Shovell has been ordered to join you so that you may exchange some of your great ships. In consideration of the advanced time of the year the Queen has also varied your instructions, as you will find by the enclosed.

P. 4. S.P. Dom., Entry Book 208, p. 28. Enclosing:—

Instructions for Sir George Rooke.

Sir C. Shovell has received orders to join you at Torbay. You are authorised, in case he arrives before you leave, to leave behind the four great ships proposed by you as not fit to go so far as Cadiz so late in the year; and, taking in four or five of our third-rate ships from Sir C. Shovell's squadron, to proceed according to your former instructions.

But, considering that the season of the year is so far advanced, you are not to proceed with our fleet so far as Gibraltar, although your former instructions directed you to do so. If, on your arrival at Cadiz, you find it impracticable to attempt that place, you are, without attempting Ponte Vedro or Vego in your return from Cadiz, to make the best of your way to Corunna and attempt that place, if it is thought practicable by a Council of sea and land general officers. If you hear from Sir S. Fairborne of a French fleet at Corunna, you are to sail direct to Corunna and attempt it. If you succeed, and the place is thought practicable to hold it, you shall take whatever steps are thought necessary by a Council of War for its defence.

In case the season permits it you are to send such a squadron of ships into the river of Lisbon as shall at a Council of War be thought requisite, "this being of great importance to that service with which you are acquainted and is to be transacted by John Methuen, Esq." You are also to send to the West Indies the detachment of ships and troops which you were to have sent there if you had gone to Cadiz.

You are to order such of our ships and of the Dutch (if they will concur in it) as you think proper to join Sir C. Shovell for the attempt to cut off "the Sieur Chateaurenau" if he and his squadron from the West Indies attempt to come to any port of France or Spain on this side of Cape Finisterre, so that, as you and the Dutch come home, Shovell may send home such of his great ships as it may not be proper to keep out at sea so late as may be necessary for intercepting Chateaurenau's squadron.

Josiah Burchett to Richard Warre.

I send with this the copy of a letter received this morning from Sir Cloudesley Shovell, wherein he makes some remarks on the instructions lately agreed to at a Committee of the Lords of the Council, and sent to him, for proceeding with a squadron of her Majesty's ships into the Soundings. Please communicate them to Lord Secretary Nottingham, although these orders will not speedily be put in execution, since, by those sent to him from Windsor on Sunday last, he is directed to proceed with the third-rates to join Sir George Rooke in Tor Bay.

P. 1. (Hol.) Endd. S.P. Dom., Naval 6, 121. Enclosing:

Copy of a letter from Sir Cloudesley Shovell, dated at Spithead, 20 July, 1702.

I received Mr. Secretary Burchett’s letter of the 17th with two orders signed by the gentlemen who, in his Royal Highness’ absence, are deputed by him to act in the affairs of the Admiralty. One directs Captain Good to convoy the merchant ships which are going to Newfoundland, but those ships are, I hope, too far out of my reach for me to carry out this order. The other order is for me to go to sea with a squadron of ships, a list of which came enclosed. One of them, the Cornwall, has been in Portsmouth harbour about a month. When Captain Lestock left her he took every man out of her who was worth taking, and she has only ninety-five men left on her now. I have no men to spare. The list also contained the names of three bombs, which I hope I may be allowed to leave at Plymouth, for they will be hard to manage at sea. The order directs me to take all possible care to prevent the French fleet from proceeding to the southward after that part of the fleet which is gone with Sir George Rooke, as also to prevent them coming into and committing insults in the Channel. It further directs me to look out for and try to intercept M. Chateauneaud [Chateau Regnaud] who, as it seems from news I received, will be hereabouts very shortly.

To do any of these three services will, modestly speaking, require three times as many battleships as are in the list. If I had a squadron which was able to cope with, or exceed, the enemy in these seas, then my opinion would be to lie in a station 20 to 40 leagues S.W. to W.S.W. from Ushant, for there I might probably meet any ships going from Brest to follow Sir George Rooke, and there chance might bring Chateau-Regnaud, if he comes for Brest or Rochefort. And if we were superior to the French it is highly probable they would not venture to insult our Channel “and leave a squadron that is able to attack 'em without 'em.”

Frenchmen brought in here a month ago from Brest water state that there are 14 of their great ships rigged there and wanting nothing but men to go to sea, that they expected three other great ships from Rochefort ready manned and that there might be in the western ports of France thirty ships of the line of battle. As for Chateau-Regnaud’s squadron, I have seen a list of it of 28 sail which I suppose to have been just upon his sailing from Martinico. Of these 26 have upwards of 50 guns; and I am apt to believe the truth of it, for such a treasure will pay for very extraordinary convoy. I have but ten men-of-war with me of the line of battle, and shall put to sea with them as soon as they are ready, but in this condition it will be impossible for me to perform any of those services my orders seem to require; and I think of taking my station "in the chops of the Channel between the Lizard and the Fornehead," to prevent their insulting the Channel as much as I can. In this case the other two services desired will be wholly neglected and the third not well secured, for if the enemy come with great superiority I cannot prevent them from insulting the Channel, "for they will either drive me before 'em or take me along with them."

"You will see by what I have writ that I am in a great dilemma how to perform my orders, and as I esteem Admiral Churchill and Mr. Hill to be my good friends, I shall take it as a great favour and service to me and to the country that they will send me word that they approve my design or direct me where they think I have made a wrong judgment."

I must further let you know that the Humber and Ipswich are in dock and cannot be out this week. If I stay for them it will be a fortnight before I put to sea, and the Shrewsbury is not yet returned from the Downs. I expect the Salisbury out of harbour to-day or to-morrow to proceed E. according to his Royal Highness' orders; and the Nassau and Dragon, which may be out to-morrow, I will send to Ushant or the Fornehead to get intelligence. Other details.

24 July. Petition to the Prince [Lord High Admiral] of Tobias Bowles. Deal. I present this memorial in a desire to preserve our trade. Most of our ships captured in the late war were captured within, or 50 leagues without, our Soundings. Our trade to America, Asia and Africa is greater than any other nation's, and our ships when trading there are far away from each other and cannot communicate. When laden they go for our Soundings and are often taken (with cargoes of great value) close to England. This often happened for want of clean men-of-war and when our cruisers were lying in harbour. If these were ordered out they seldom went far enough to sea, and the French privateers &c., which cruised outside them and go to 120 leagues from Lands End, intercepted many ships. These captures enriched the privateers of St. Malo and enabled them to build fresh ships, and they would attack and fight any merchant ship of England. The way to stop this is to send out cruisers as soon as war is declared, and this was lately done. These frightened away the French privateers and informed our merchantmen of the war as they approached the Soundings; but for the last month, these cruisers have been removed and have been ordered to go as convoys to Ireland, Newfoundland &c., and the French privateers have come out again and our trade is in great danger. At present many ships from various parts [details] are expected home, which have not as yet heard of the war.

In order to protect them we should have "at least 21 sail of clean men-of-war of the best sailors, 3 third, 15 fourth and 3 fifth-rates . . . divided into three squadrons and stations, a third to cruise cross and cross from ten leagues to thirty to and fro distance from Scilly, a third more 80 or 90 leagues off of Scilly, the other third from the outer parts of our Soundings till about 40 or 50 leagues without the said banks into the sea." The last of these three squadrons will be about in the place where the French privateers come and will be in daily pursuit of them and, if we cannot take them, starve them by keeping prizes from them. When a merchant ship comes to the outermost station, a ship should be sent to convoy her to the middle station; then another to convoy her to the innermost station; and then a third to see her into port, each ship then returning to her station.

As it is highly necessary to have ships clean, a fourth squadron should be got ready at Plymouth, which should be ready to relieve the foul ships two months after these squadrons have been sent out. This course will "bring Monsieur down," otherwise he will grow rich with our money and fight us with it. Within the last month there have arrived here several ships worth from 100,000l. to 200,000l. apiece. Several ships have lately come up to the Downs from the West Indies and elsewhere, which knew nothing of the war. Not one of them met with any of our men-of-war either at sea or in the Soundings; but several have had one or more fights with French privateers and some have been taken.

25 July. Copy of Affidavit sworn by Thomas Fairfax, of London.

In the case of William Hamond versus Gervase Hamond and others, he says that he was at Hazlewood in Yorkshire, the house of Sir Walter Vavasor,* in June or July, 1700. There he found the plaintiff and Mrs. Bladen reported as man and wife by Sir Walter and Lady Vavasor and others. Lady Vavasor told deponent that plaintiff and Mrs. Bladen were married. Details. The plaintiff's father (the defendant) was displeased, whom they hoped to appease by deponent's mediation. Deponent, being asked by all parties, agreed to try and mediate with plaintiff's father, but desired, before doing so, to have some proof that the marriage had taken place. Both the plaintiff and Mrs. Bladen assured him (deponent) that they were married, and the deponent gave him a letter signed "Pue," purporting to shew that Pue had married them. Plaintiff authorised deponent to say that he would be willing to humble himself before his father, own his fault and beg his pardon before what company and in what manner his father pleased, provided his father would give him and his wife his blessing and bread. Accordingly deponent went to defendant's house at Scarthingwill [Scarthingwell] and tried to bring about a reconciliation, but failed.

27 July. Josiah Burchett to John Ellis.

I send the enclosed, giving information as to the French fleet, from off Dunkirk. Pray lay it before Secretary Hedges.

Captain Beaumont to [Josiah Burchett].

By the enclosed his Royal Highness and the Council will see how things are here between the Dutch and me. The French squadron still continue in Flemish Road, and yesterday two small ships came out of the harbour and joined them, which we suppose to be fireships, and I think four galleys have come from the westward to Dunkirk.

We see plainly two men-of-war at Ostend, one of 66 and one of 50 guns, ready to sail to join the ships at Dunkirk.

My orders of the 17th are, in case Ponty [Pointis] gets out, to follow him as far as I have any intelligence of him and, in case that fails, to go to Leith. This leads me, with submission (and in case no particular service is expected at Leith) to desire his Royal Highness and the Council to consider what the French squadron may be, what mine is, and that the Dutch will not follow the French more than five or six leagues. I send information* as to the condition of my ships and supplies. I am sending this by the Crown, with orders to get water for the squadron, and expect to get his Royal Highness’ orders from the Merlin if she is in the Downs, there being few or none of the enemy’s privateers abroad. I should like to send some of my ships in to clean, for they want it; but my squadron is too small for me to do this.

Notes of consultations between Captain Beaumont and Vice-Admiral Evertsen and other officers of the Dutch squadron.

ships as, on consultation, may be thought right to join the English squadron in opposing the French squadron of Dunkirk and Ostend in case they come out. To this end the ships to lie as near Dunkirk as possible. If, notwithstanding all this, the French squadron come out and pass by our squadrons and go north, then it is proposed to follow them as far as we shall have any intelligence of them, and, in case this fails, to go to Leith in Scotland and bring from thence, and all the ports northward, all our merchant ships.
And it is further proposed in case the enemy's ships and galleys shall make any attempt upon the dominions of the States, that her Majesty's ships shall to their utmost power oppose them.
A consultation was held between the officers of her Majesty and of the States on 22 July, 1702, four leagues S.E. of Ostend.
Present:—Captains Beaumont and Loades, Vice-Admiral
Evertsen, Scho by Naght [sic*] Van der Dussen, Captain Van Brakell, Captain Deever.
Upon consideration it is agreed that Captain Beaumont with seven of her Majesty's ships shall be joined by five of the States', to lie south and south by east from Dunkirk, and their line to stretch away S.W. and N.E., to keep the enemy in if possible, and, if they get out, to attack them. The better to do this the Vice-Admiral off Ostend will stretch his squadron in the like manner S.W. and N.E., for better correspondence. In case the enemy get out by us, [as] the States' ships can follow them no further till they are victualled, then Rear-Admiral Van der Dussen has orders to follow them with thirteen sail so far as the Dogger Bank and no farther and to cruise there till further orders. The five sail with Commodore Beaumont are to be of the thirteen sail.

Yours of the 23rd with extract from Havanna. I think the news very good and the information as to Chateau-Regnaud's strength very exact. Sir Edmund Andros to [Viscount Hatton].

A frigate is urgently needed to attend at Guernsey. It has never been without one for years. The cruisers in the Channel cannot protect the trade of the island. Enclosed shows the necessity of the frigate.

Enclosing:—

Sir Edmund Andros to [Viscount Hatton].

We came from London Tuesday evening and here on Thursday noon. The Dragon frigate (with the soldiers' clothes aboard) went out to sea to cruise on that day, but would not take any island vessel under her convoy, though Elias Dolbell in the John Square stered [steered]. Thomas Mesurier in the Ann and Thomas Nefettel [with] ketches and a Jersey bark were ready and wanted a convoy. John and Daniel Perchard and John Tasker are ready or nearly so, so we want a convoy for the island, as promised by the Admiralty. Sir C. Shovell has sailed, and Sir J. Munden is commanding at Spithead.

1. To Mr. Savage, High Sheriff of Worcestershire.

The men impressed from Worcestershire for service have been unfit for it, and that Captain Culliford has had to discharge two of them (lepers) and one (old and infirm). The Committee of Council desire you to be more careful of this matter in the future. Disappointment, and expense to her Majesty's service.

2. To the Attorney General.

The Committee of Council are dissatisfied with the proceedings of Sir John Munden and the acquittal of him, and particularly with his going from Corunna after the French were got in, contrary, as they apprehend, to his instructions. Moreover this has not been objected to him at the Council of War, and consequently he is not cleared on this point, and orders have been given for calling to town the Judge Advocate to attend the Lords, at which time you also will be desired to be present. I thought it right "to send you the enclosed papers that you may peruse them and come prepared to give the Lords your advice." Pray bring the papers with you.

3. To the Master of the Ordnance.

John Fitch represents to the Queen that he was appointed by patent of King Charles II workmaster for building and repairing all forts &c. and other works whatsoever during his own life, and that he has lately been deprived of the benefit of the same, although he was willing to do all such works at reasonable rates. The Queen thinks he ought to enjoy his patent and that you should employ him, if he will do the work as well and as cheaply as others.

RICHARD WARRE to WILLIAM AGLIONBY.

Yours of yesterday. My Lord desires the old arrangement of posts between this and London, i.e. one to and fro each night, the ordinary post days remaining as at other times, and an extra-ordinary one on such days as there is none in the absence of the Court; and on foreign and inland post days the mail not to leave London till the post from Windsor arrives there. This is no more than what was practised when the Court was at Windsor, Newmarket or Winchester in my time; and the office must know how it was arranged.

I have spoke to my Lord about Count Rassa and may let you have his answer to-morrow. I remember nothing of the letter from Genoa, nor does my Lord; but will look for it in his papers when he returns. My Lord desires to know the date of the letters to Mons'. Schonenburg which you prepared for his hand. I cannot find them in the book of Spain or Italy.

Has there been any reference upon a petition of Mr. Matthews desiring a Commission of Appeal in Ireland? Mr. Tilson can inform you of this. If so, it was to my Lord, and is entered in the book of petitions.

My Lord desires you to send out summonses to the "Cabinet Council" to attend the Queen on Sunday afternoon next at Windsor.* "in the afternoon and not in the morning, the next Sunday being a Sacrament day."

Enclosing:—

Lieut.-General De Maran to the Commissioners for Sick and Wounded.

Gentlemen,—I am pleased by your letter in regard to the prisoners and I see you treat them with all kindness. We treat yours well and you will receive no complaint from them save that they have been kept for perhaps too long a time from their country. It is to be desired on their account that an agreement could be reached which will restore them to liberty. I see by your letter that you do not regard Lawrence,* on whose behalf I wrote to you, as a citizen of this town, although he has lived here for eighteen years with his family, as is shewn by a certificate which I send. I also send a copy of his commission from the Admiral to arm for war, which, I am sure, will convince you that he is a prisoner of war and of the kind which you have.

François Laurans, an Englishman, has lived here for about eighteen years, and has enjoyed the privileges contained in his Majesty’s declaration of the year 1622. On “Satnsday” last I had yours of July 25th. I have not seen the D[uke of Hamilton?] since and do not know why you gave a copy of the address to Lady Malb[orou], and why you don’t improve the acquaintance you made amongst the statesmen; but without hearing of them I am very ready to approve of them and to vindicate you for doing that which I am much inclined to believe you would not do without good grounds. The first time I can see the D[uke] I will endeavour to get a sight of your letter—but only to confirm me in the good opinion I have of your conduct.

We begin now to think of our elections, though Parliament is not yet adjourned, and so far as I can see there begins to be a greater vigour in the nation than usual on such occasions.

“If I might judge of the elections through the whole Kingdom by those [that] are like to be made in the country I live in, and some shires about, I believe our Parliament might recover in some measure the sinking reputation of our country; but there are so many difficulties to struggle with that it is hard to determine the event. The hopes of reward and the fear of punishment are powerful arguments to weak minds, and you know what party has the distribution of them. However, if honest men will do their endeavour, I hope still the best; but there are too many who, I am afraid, will lay themselves aside out of a scruple which I don’t understand, and a diffidence of doing anything to purpose, so that there must be great pains taken to remove those scruples and to give people such a just sense of the danger we are in that they may not be indifferent in a matter which concerns the nation so much. The D[uke] is now in the West

* The name is spelt in different ways.
Country and, you may be sure, is not idle. There are a great many more who are not to be blamed if there is not a right set of men chosen in the shires they have interest in.

"There is great pains taken by some of the Court party to blind people’s understandings. They leave no stone unturned. They endeavour to raise the scruples of some by the change [which] is made in the oaths by the Council, and there are stories spread industriously, as if there were a design to overturn the present Constitution, merely to blunt the edge of some well-meaning people; but I hope that neither English money nor the designs of unnatural countrymen shall be able to pervert the judgment of honest men so far as to mistake the true interest of their nation; and if we do ever come, the victory will be the more glorious that we have such powerful enemies to deal with.

"By all accounts we get the English Parliament will be Tory. Whether that will turn to our advantage or prejudice is uncertain, but there may be this advantage in it that it is so generally believed that the heads of that party are enemies to Scotland that it may lessen the credit here of those of our countrymen who are thought to be influenced by them, so that our elections may be better for it. Perhaps this is to reason too far upon uncertainties and therefore I shall say no more about it. Some months will determine the matter. In the meantime I hope every honest man will endeavour to do his best.

"We expect daily to hear how the difference is taken up amongst our courtiers who are gone from this lately. The parties seem to be strong on both sides, and, by anything we have heard yet it appears to be doubtful which will get the victory. You will have the advantage to know how the intrigues are managed about making friends at Court and what complaints are made on both sides. But, whoever gets the better, our country is still at a loss, for those feuds and quarrels make us more contemptible to the English, and the advantage will be purchased at the expense of the nation."

Queen's command:—To give order for paying 300l. to Colonel Quary.

The master of a ship [details] who has been put ashore near Cape Clear, by a French privateer which had captured his vessel, says there are six sail of French privateers about 30 leagues west from Cape Clear. They are spread out so as to view about 18 leagues, and will make it impossible for any ship from the westward to come in. The said profits were constantly yearly paid to such persons for whom they were intrusted in such shares and proportions as of right to them belonged. Enclosing:—

The complaint.

Captain Richard Clarke, of the Newark, deposes on oath that his master's mate, John Burrows, made oath that Justice Bateman in Marine Square had taken two pressed men from him and told him that the next time he pressed without warrant he would put him in New prison. Bateman afterwards acknowledged to deponent that he had said this to the mate, and that he had orders that there should be no more pressing and that he had cleared the two men before deponent came to him.

The Postmasters-General to [Nottingham].

We send answers to the questions sent us about ships for the West Indies. What we propose is not so good as Mr. Dummer suggests; but much cheaper. Orders of a higher nature will, we suppose, still be trusted with a man-of-war or advice-boat of the Navy; and only matters of less consequence by these boats. That duty they can perform quickly and surely.

A. The Questions and Answers.

1. Q. Can good and nimble sailing vessels always be had?
   A. Such sloops and brigantines as were employed by the Government to carry despatches in the late war were never found to be wanting when the Government needed them. There are some in the river now, but we cannot say whether this will always be the case.

2. Q. At what rates such vessels are to be hired?
   A. This depends on the size of the crew and vessel. Speaking generally, 150l. per voyage.

3. Q. What will be the hire of such vessels to go and return empties?
   A. This makes some alteration. Governors of the plantations can always send back despatches cheaply if they allow the despatch boats to load.

Your expenses will be paid and you may draw bills for them on the Navy Board, who are ordered to accept and pay them.

Further command:—That whenever you come to treat of a cartel with France or Spain you make it a first article that all the Queen's subjects who were made prisoners before the declaration of war, or who, residing in France or Spain before the declaration, were desirous to return, be released without ransom or exchange, unless it be for persons in the same position in the Queen's dominions. I think there are none of these.

20 Aug. H.M.S. Queen

SIR CLOUDESLEY SHOVELL to ———.

The Shrewsbury joined me yesterday, and to-day the Nassau and Dragon. The Nassau took a French merchantman of 150 tons from Hispaniola, 55 days out, with sugar, indigo and cotton. She had 11 guns and six pateraroes. The Dragon also took a French ship of about 90 tons bound to Nantes with mud-fish from Newfoundland. A Dutch privateer had taken this fish ship, and the French master had ransomed the ship for 4,200 livres, and remains aboard the Dutch privateer to make good the ransom. I hope the prize will not be returned to the Dutch privateer. If it is, it will encourage the practice of ransoming ships at sea, which is a great advantage to the enemy. Without it they could not support their privateers, neither could our merchantmen venture without convoy, as they now do. I have sent in the ships with their prizes and am confident they will make no unnecessary stay. The surgeon of Captain Byng's prize said it was expected that Chateau-Regnaud would leave Havana at the beginning of August (their style) with 22 ships of the line in company with the flota.
The St. Michael, Vesuvius fireship, Humber and Russell have just now joined me.

I now "design to my other station," where I hope for more strength. I intend to cruise there till the 10th or 15th of next month, by which time we shall not have above three weeks beer and water. We shall then return to Spithead, "it being the opinion of everybody that, after that time, the great ships should be in port."

20 Aug. Whitehall. NOTTINGHAM'S LETTERS.

1. To the Commissioners of the Post Office.

The Queen desires to make use of Mr. Dummer's vessels for carrying letters to the West Indies. Consider what rates should be charged for carrying letters to or from those islands.

2. To the Prince's Council.

Mr. Dummer having received directions to prepare his vessels for carrying letters to the West Indies, the Queen desires that protection be granted for such men as are necessary for those vessels.

As the Queen is to bear the charge of these ships, and to have the profits which may be derived by their bringing home passengers, or gold, silver or "cochineel" (the only things which they are to bring), the Navy Board should have directions to consider and report what rates should be charged for passengers, or for any of these things.

You are also to consider what sum of money should be impressed on Mr. Dummer to enable him to fit out his vessels for the Queen's service, and to pay wages to his crews, and other charges.

I enclose a scheme of the intended voyages which Mr. Dummer intends to perform. He is to give an account from time to time of all his expenses and of the profits made from all sources, to the Navy Board. You are to cause a draft to be prepared of such articles and instructions as you shall think necessary, and send it to me for submission to the Committee of Council.

A Scheme for Foreign Advice.

To establish a monthly intelligence between London and the West Indies, and, after the same method, to make all intelligence by sea less precarious and more expeditious than it now is.

It is proposed to have four vessels of 130 tons burden to maintain an intercourse with "Barbadoes, Antegoa, Montserat, Nevis and Jamaica." The scheme of sailings and returns will be as follows for a year beginning in January:—
<table>
<thead>
<tr>

Thus A sails in January, returns in April, sails again in May, and so on in succession.

This continual going out and returning will answer all the needs of State and trade, and conduce to the security of public interest between this kingdom and those islands in peace and war.

Each vessel will stay—

At Antegoa... ... ... ... 3 "
Nevis... ... ... ... 3 " Jamaica... ... ... ... 8 "

Each will go, stay, and return in 90 days.

Colonel Collier to [Nottingham].

Nine prisoners escaped from Mount Orguil [Orgueil] Castle by treachery of the garrison. The sentry went with them. The sails and oars are all brought into the Castle to hinder desertion and correspondence with France. They and the boats are guarded. The prisoners took away oars and sails from within the Castle [details]. They were pursued, but the pursuers seized only an empty boat, which the escapers turned adrift to distract them. The sentry on guard over the sails [at the time] was a raw young lad. I send his deposition. I will hold a Court Martial as soon as I have a quorum.

Deposition of Michael Bennet, soldier.

Was sentry between 10 and 12 midnight. Saw John Smalbone (one of the soldiers that went off with the prisoners) come near his post. Challenged him and was answered. Smalbone said of some oars and sails lying by, "What do these things stand here to fright people for?" and took them and threw them into a room which is part of an old tower adjoining the gate. Some time after he heard some people talk French together, but did not understand what they said, nor did he challenge them, though 'twas in the harbour.

Hedges' Letters.

1. To Sir George Rooke.

The Queen's motives for sending you the enclosed instructions which, "being on Sunday last read to her Majesty in a Committee of Council, were there approved," are that the French are endeavouring to intercept all provisions which are being sent to Prince Eugene, that come to him across the Gulf of Venice, and, in spite of the protests of the State of Venice, have sent "not only M. Fourbin with the frigates and two ships back into the Gulf, but also in all probability the Count de Toulouse with six men-of-war and six galleys and fire-ships to destroy the magazines and make some attempts on the Emperor's dominions on the other side of the Gulf. The importance of preventing these designs and the fair and almost certain opportunity of taking and destroying this squadron are so plain that I need only mention them," and tell you that, by the best advice we have from Toulon, there are no ships there that can be got ready to make it hazardous to make such a detachment as is mentioned in the enclosed orders.

We have some fear lest you may not have sufficient provisions for this expedition, but we hope you can supply this detachment by taking provisions from other ships, and by credit, if you succeed at Cadiz. We also fear that after detaching the ships to the West Indies (and the Queen still wishes this to be done) you may not have sufficient ships for this service, especially as some of them may have suffered in the attempt on Cadiz. Of this we cannot judge, so it is left to your judgment to send the detachment "if it be practicable." But I may tell you that, if we have Cadiz, the Queen is resolved to have a much stronger squadron than this in the Mediterranean next summer; consequently there will be no need to send ships home except such as will need to be docked and cannot be refitted at Cadiz. With these, and the Dutch ships that will come back, you are to return after the services mentioned in your former instructions are performed. We hope too that Admiral Allemond will concur with you in this service, and send some Dutch ships if this expedition be resolved on at a Council of War, although we know that the Dutch are not provisioned for such a voyage; "but that defect should, if possible, be supplied by you, and the States, we doubt not, will repay her Majesty"; but, lest they should make any difficulty for want of orders, I may tell you that we are pressing the Pensioner to get the States to send orders of this kind to Admiral Allemond.

It is well remembered that you considered the attempt on Cadiz would be impracticable if the French had any considerable number of ships in that port; therefore it may be necessary for us to have a squadron there to defend that place after we have gained it; but we believe the squadron which is proposed to be detached into the Straits will return to Cadiz before the French can possibly make any attempt to regain it. It is hoped, too, that you may leave some ships there, notwithstanding this detachment be made.

The Queen is confident in your zeal and loyalty that you will push this as far as in prudence is possible. I enclose a list of the French ships under Chateau-Regnaud and of Du Casse's squadron, and of some ships that are gone to sea with five months' provisions we know not whither.

Instructions to Sir George Rooke.

We think it may be for our service and that of our Allies to send some ships at once into the Mediterranean and Adriatic Seas to oppose the French there, which we cannot do so soon as is requisite but by a detachment from your command. If therefore you take Cadiz and its port, you are to call a Council of War and, "if it shall be judged fit and practicable," we authorise you to detach eighteen or twenty ships, under the command of such officer as you think right, with orders to enter the Adriatic, if the French continue there, and endeavour to take or destroy them there or elsewhere and to return then to Cadiz, giving him such orders as are conducive to the performance of this or any other service.

Ships remaining with Chateau-Regnaud.

Eighteen ships (varying from 70 to 44 guns), four fire-ships, two "flutes" and two "crevettes."

Names given. [To be sent to] Benbow, Rooke and Shovell.
Ships under the Count de Toulouse.
Six battleships varying from 110 to 54 guns [names given], a frigate, two fire-ships and smaller vessels. Under the Chevalier le Fourbin, three frigates and two fire-ships. At Toulon, fifteen ships, of which there are fitting five or six from 60 to 70 guns.
[This list] for Sir George Rooke.
Under M. Du Casse, eight ships of from 70 to 30 guns. Gone to Mexico, three; and to Cadiz, two. Supposed to be gone to Cadiz or Lisbon, four.
[Names given. The first part of this list, as to M. Du Casse's ships, is marked "for Benbow."]
Nine ships [names given, and varying from 70 to 40 guns] are destined for some place or places unknown [to the writer].
Two sailed from Brest on 26 May and six more were ready to sail thence on 26 July with five months' provisions.
[This list] for Rooke, Shovell and Benbow.

2. To Sir George Rooke.
I send further instructions and a letter which I desire you would shew to the Duke of Ormond. We are rejoicing at the good news from Prince Eugene, of which the prints will inform you, and hope for similar good news from the fleet. "The Earl of Marlborough pushes the French from one camp to another, and if some others in the army had been as ready as his Lordship to have taken advantages the French army had been in all likelihood entirely defeated more than once." Sir Clodesley Shovell is lying between the Lizard and Brest, but not with so many ships as we thought, the Dutch having sent us not a single ship since the Grand Fleet left England; "and although Sir David Mitchell has been above a month upon a negociation with Holland to get some ships to strengthen Sir C. Shovell, and others to go to the West Indies, I understand he is like to return without getting one ship." Captain Beaumont still blocks up Pointi's* squadron in Dunkirk, and we do not yet hear of any considerable number of ships fitting out in any of the ports of France on this side.
"Her Majesty is going to the Bath, and will set out from Windsor on Wednesday, lodge at Oxon that night and dine there on Thursday and then to Cirencester; so to Bath on Friday, where she designs to continue about a month," and then will return to London.
Parliament is to sit the 8th of October.

3. To the Prince's Council.
Command:—That the three bomb-vessels at Portsmouth be laid up. Inform his Royal Highness.

* Jean Bernard Desjeuns, Baron de Pointis, the famous French naval commander. His name is spelt in many different ways in these documents.

I have considered of instructions for Mr. Warters, the Lord Admiral’s solicitor. I send a draft of them with an additional clause to control the Receiver, which I think necessary for the service. If he executes his office duly I think he may have the same salary as the Receiver, and be allowed his necessary expenses, to be paid out of the perquisites of the Admiralty. Pray ask his Royal Highness to consider whether the whole business relating to perquisites may not be managed to greater advantage by allowing poundage to such officer as his Royal Highness shall think fit to employ.

I could not answer your last, as you were “in motion about 24 Aug.  Royal Warrants to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland.

1. The Duke of Ormond has petitioned shewing that King William III took a lease from him of the duties of butlerage and prisage belonging to him in Ireland for seven years from 25 March, 1695, at 1,500l. a year; that this sum was then said to be the full value of the duties; but that, during the last three years of the term the aggregate receipts from this source came to 11,065l. odd. He therefore asks that we will take a new lease as from Lady Day last, at a yearly rent of 2,500l. a year for three years. You have reported that this might be a good bargain for us in time of peace, but that, with a war begun which is likely to last three years, it is not easy to make an agreement that would not prove disadvantageous to one side or the other;
and that we should appoint our own officers to collect the duties and keep separate and good accounts, and account quarterly to the Duke for the receipts. We approve this advice. Give orders accordingly to our revenue officers in Ireland. Expenses of management to be deducted from what is paid to the Duke.

2. You represent to us—and the Deputy Receiver-General of Ireland confirms it—that 289l. 9s. is due to the Bishop of Ossory as executor to his father, Sir Standish Hartstongue for so much in arrear due to him as one of the Barons of the Exchequer, being part of the additional 200l. a year paid to all the judges.
The sum is due for fifteen months and 72 days to 5 June, 1695, when he was superseded. Give directions for its payment to the Bishop of Ossory.

3. Sets out a lease made by King Charles II on 26 February, 1664, to Roger, Earl of Orrery, and Wentworth, Earl of Roscommon, granting to them and their heirs "a front waste-house plot westside of Nicholas Street, returned the propriety of Sir Daniel Bourke, a front waste-house plot returned the propriety of Sir Nicholas Comin, the same and a yard and garden returned the propriety of Alderman Nicholas Fanning and Alderman James Bourke, a front waste-house plot returned the propriety of Patrick Wolfe FitzRichard and a front house plot returned the propriety of Francis Creagh FitzThomas," all of which plots lie in the city of Limerick. These plots are now and have, ever since the recent troubles in Ireland, been used for a parade for a garrison there.

Proceeds:—Murrough, Viscount Blessington, claims a title to these plots under the grant, and asks for compensation for the time it has been so used and that he may have it for his own use if it is not thought necessary to keep it for our service. It appears, from your report and a report of the Solicitor General there, that Viscount Blessington's title is good, and that the said waste ground cannot at any time be dispensed with for our soldiers to parade in, and that 350l. would be a sufficient sum to acquire Viscount Blessington's interest and pay him compensation. You shall, on his making a good conveyance of it to such person, in trust for us, as you think fit, give order for paying 350l. to him.

ROYAL LETTERS [to the CHANCELLOR of SCOTLAND].

Recites the recommendation of the Earl of Morton made by the Parliament of Scotland in 1693 and 1702, and the letters of King William III in his favour. Proceeds:—The Queen, satisfied of the Earl's loyalty &c., ordains a letter of gift to be made and past under the Privy Seal of Scotland granting . . . . the Earl 1,000l. sterling or 12,000l. Scots to be paid to him yearly out of the first and readiest of the rents, duties, profits &c. of the earldom and lordship of Orkney and Zetland. This grant shall include all other grants in the Earl's favour out of the said lordship, and shall be paid till his cause be fully tried. To secure the payment the Queen makes over to him so much of the rents &c. of the earldom &c. as will pay the annuity and appoints him and his deputies chamberlains and collectors of the said rents, "as fully and effectually as if a special and ample letter of chamberlanny" had been given him for that effect. After paying himself his annuity, he shall be liable to the Queen for the balance and shall give good security for that end. Provided that if the Commissioners of Treasury think it better to set the earldom &c. in tack rather than continue it in collection, they may do so; but, if they do so, they shall oblige the tacksmen to pay the Earl of Morton his annuity. *Other details. [The Earl of] GALWAY to [NOTTINGHAM].

Many thanks for sending me the petition which has been presented to you against me.

When the late king sent me to Piedmont at the end of 1693, his Majesty and the States General had me paid the sums due for arrears to the regiments of Baltasard, Loches* and Julien, with orders to pay them according to the accounts which would be given me by M. Vandermeer, Minister of the States at the Court of the Duke of Savoy, who had been commissary of those troops and had paid them before they entered into the service of the Duke [of Savoy]. I passed my accounts and remitted all the quitances when I returned to London. But—in order to make my conduct clear to you—I gave to MM. de Baltasard and de Loches what was due to their regiments. The first died a short time after. M. D'Aubemarques, who was his lieutenant-colonel, and had the regiment after him, took care of the details, and I took the utmost care that no injustice was done to anyone in either of those regiments. I could not do the same with regard to the regiment of Julien, because the colonel had gone back to France. That regiment becoming mine, I myself considered the payment of all the officers present, and followed Mr. Vandermeer's memoirs in keeping for those who were absent what he thought was due to them. I had about 400l. or 500l. over, and asked the King to be allowed to keep it in order to reward officers for special services, or pay those in want. The King consented to this.

Some time afterwards I received a letter from the Sieur Duc, who apparently presents the petition. I shewed it to M. Vandermeer and to the officers who had known him in the regiment, especially to M. Guiraud, who was then the major and is now lieutenant-colonel of the regiment of Belcastel in Holland. All told me that his claims were not well founded. I saw him last year in Holland and told him all that I have told you, and said it was useless to speak of it, as all the money had been paid out and accounted for more than four years ago. However, M. Vandermeer being absent, I spoke of the matter to M. Cliquet, Postmaster at Leyden, who had always occupied himself with the affairs of those troops in Holland. He said he did not think that officer was right. When I saw the officer

* Hereafter called De Baltasard and De Loches, but here the prefixes “de” seem to stand merely for the genitive case.
1702. himself in London I told him that I thought nothing was due to him.

Of the great number of officers whom he names, I do not think that he has a commission from one. Most of the names are unknown to me. I know that some are dead. Some I know, and they are friends of mine. I have seen them often since that time, and they have not shewn me any sign of discontent. It is not likely that if they had been left unpaid they would have allowed nearly nine years to elapse without complaint. Since 1694 I have heard of no such pretensions save that of the Sieur Duc, and, looking at the accounts on which I must rely, think it ill-founded.

Royal Sovereign. ORDERS by SIR GEORGE ROOKE to the Commanders of HER MAJESTY's hired Ships and Vessels.

Great quantities of rich goods and plate have been seized as plunder from Port St. Mary's and are on board her Majesty's ships, transports, victuallers and tenders. You are directed to secure any of such goods which are in your ship to the sole use of the Queen. When you arrive in England you shall allow no baggage to be put out of your ship until she be first visited by some officer of the Customs. As soon as possible you are to transmit to me the best account you can of the marks, numbers and contents of every cask, bail, chest, box or parcel on your ship, for whose account it was put on board, and with as little cause for any pretence of embezzlement as may possibly be. Do not fail in this, as you expect compliance with your charter party on the Queen's behalf. Words of warranty.

Entered Aug. AN ESTABLISHMENT of PAYMENTS for CIVIL AFFAIRS in IRELAND, to be made from 24 June, 1702.

This list is similar to those published in Calendar of S.P. Ireland, 1660–2, at p. 524 seq., and in Calendar of S.P. Ireland, 1666–9.

* See the entry above, at 31 March, 1702.

1702.

at p. 73 seq. This entry is calendared by reference to the later calendar, only the differences between them being noted in the following entry. The following list does not contain the names of the holders of the various offices, but is merely a framework of the establishment, with a list of the fees paid to each officer.

1. Court of Exchequer:—
A Lord Treasurer is inserted with 365l. a year.
A second Sergeant is inserted with 30l. 6s. 0d. a year.
A Chief Remembrancer is given with 51l. 19s. 2d. a year.
The Sumonister is called Sumonister and clerk of the estreats.
In addition to the officers mentioned in 1666 there are also here a pursuivant (79l.) and an auditor of the foreign accounts and imprests (121l. 13s. 4d.). There is also an augmentation to the three Barons of the Exchequer to the amount of 200l. a year each.

2. Court of Queen's Bench:—
The offices here are the same as in 1666 (q.v. in Calendar of S.P. Ireland, 1666–9, at p. 74). The salaries paid to the three judges are 600l. to the Chief Justice and 400l. to the second and third justices with augmentations of 200l. a year each.

3. Court of Chancery:—
There are here four masters in Chancery instead of two. The Lord Chancellor gets 2,000l. a year, the Master of the Rolls 157l. 9s. 11d.

4. Court of Common Pleas:—
As before. The salaries are, however, 500l., 400l. and 400l. to the first three justices respectively; and each of them has an augmentation of 200l. a year.

5. Officers attending the State:—
There is added here a "physician to the State" (66l. 13s. 4d.), a keeper of the rooms in Dublin Castle (16l. 16s. 0d.), a porter of the Castle (13l. 13s. 9d.), Keeper of the Records in Birmingham’s Tower (10l. 0s. 0d.), Constable of the Castle (20l. 0s. 0d.), and a payment of 500l. to the Lord Mayor and citizens of Dublin.

6. Incidents:—
The charge of the circuits put amongst these, and is now 2,000l. If any judges do not go circuit their allowance is to be saved to the Queen.
Paid to the Dean of Christchurch for the rent of the Exchequer Chambers and other rooms in the Four Courts, 15l. 10s. 0d.
Rent of Skyddys Castle, being the storehouse of Cork, 7l. 10s. 0d.
The payment to the Receiver-General for paper and parchment is 25l. 0s. 0d.
The keeper of the House for receipts gets now 5l. 0s. 0d.
The singers of Christchurch for praying for the Queen get now 2l. 0s. 0d. [each].

7. The heading "provincial officers" mentioned in 1666 is omitted here.

8. The officers of the Customs are the same as in 1666, but the salaries are in some cases slightly smaller. No searcher for Newcastle, Dundrum &c. [see Calendar of S.P. Ireland, 1666–9, at p. 76] is given here.
A note here adds that any vacancy which occurs in any of these posts shall be filled by a fresh appointment, which shall be during pleasure only. The "Commissioners General of Customs" and "Accountants General" do not appear here.

9. The heading "Creation Money" does not appear in this list.

10. The list of perpetuities is as follows:

- Provost and Fellows of Trinity College, Dublin, Dean and Chapter of Christchurch, Bishop of Meath and Archbishop of Dublin and "chanter" of Christchurch, Dublin, with details as in 1666 but with slightly different sums. To these are added:

SEPTMBER, 1702.

The Commissioners of Victualling to Hedges.

The account of victuals received from Portsmouth is the same as what has been already sent. We hope we need not send them twice a week.

1 Sept.
Whitehall.

NOTTINGHAM'S LETTERS.

1. To Colonel Collier.

Since my last, application has been made to me on behalf of James Drouett, the master of a small barque, who says that he anchored in the road near Elizabeth Castle on 3 May last about 10 p.m., and the next day about 7 a.m., brought his barque into the pier of St. Aubin's, and about two hours after made his declaration to her Majesty's officer of the Customs. If this is the same vessel as you mention in yours of 31 July, discharge her; and if it is another, discharge her also, unless there is some good reason against it.

2. To the Prince's Council.

The Queen has directed Consul Broughton at Venice to send the Navy Board details of the expenses to which he says he is put in taking care of her Majesty's poor mariners and to draw bills on them. The Prince to order that these bills be accepted and paid by the Navy Board without delay.

[Sep 2]

[Lieut.-Col.] L. MORDAUNT to [NOTTINGHAM].

An officer of our regiment is prosecuted here. He was guilty only of a great fault in drink. He is extremely sorry, and hopes you will pass by his offence and not ruin a young man who has nothing but his sword to depend upon. I will, if you please, remove him to Jersey. I have begged the Duchess of Norfolk to intercede for him.

BERNARD ELLIS to SAME.

Confirms foregoing as to the offence and contrition of the offending officer, Lieutenant la Boulay. Kept him in prison a fortnight, but had to release him to duty then, as there was only one other officer fit for duty.

HEDGES to the EARL OF ROCHESTER.

The gentlemen of Somerset and Dorset have been here to pay their duty to the Queen, and amongst them several members of Parliament, with my Lord Pawlett, seem to object to Parliament meeting so soon as October 8. They give two reasons against it—that the members who are justices of the peace must take the oaths and test at the next sessions of the peace, which are held on October 7, and think they incur penalties if they do not do so, and cannot therefore be in town on October 8; and that their appearing at the first Quarter Sessions will be of good use in the country. I think the first objection invalid. The sacrament must be taken within three months; but I think the oath and test may be taken at a sessions after three months [from their appointment]. The second objection has more weight; but I think their real fear is that there may not be a full house at first, as members from the North and West may not have finished their country affairs by that time. I have told the Lord Treasurer and have received orders to request Lord Secretary Nottingham to summon a meeting of the Lords of the Committee of Council who are about the Town to consider if there is any great disadvantage in postponing the meeting of Parliament for ten days or a fortnight.

The Queen goes to-morrow to visit Bristol, at the request of the Mayor and his brethren, who came yesterday to invite her. She comes back the same night.

I find more occasion to be here than I expected, and as all business has to be sent here and despatched, and Mr. Warre or Mr. Ellis can attend with my letters or take directions from the Committee [of Council], I hope I may not be required [in London]; but, if my Lords think my presence desirable I will ask the Queen's leave to return.

2 Sept.
Whitehall.

NOTTINGHAM'S LETTERS.

1. To the Officers of the Ordnance.

Queen's command:—To send 500 saddles, holsters and bit bridles to Portsmouth to go on the Resolution, Sunderland, &c.

2. To the Commissioners of Transport.

The saddles are ordered [see foregoing]. Certain stores—if ready—to go on board the Anglesey and some victualling vessels now at the Nore waiting for a fair wind to Portsmouth; or, otherwise, to go [by land] to Portsmouth. The beds to go on this vessel or the victualling vessels. Details.

Same.

RICHARD WARRE to JOSIAH BURCHETT.

I send, by Lord Nottingham's orders, two letters for Admiral Almonde* and one for Rear-Admiral Vassenaer. My Lord received them, for forwarding, by the Dutch post to-day. Send them by the first conveyance to Sir George Rooke's fleet.

NOTTINGHAM'S LETTERS.

1. To the Earl of Carlisle.

The Queen has given order for your fresh patent as Governor of Carlisle. Details.

2. To the Commissioners of Transport.

you must provide vessels to take them to Portsmouth and so to Ireland.

Six lines. Ibid.

4 Sept. Norwich.

Humphrey Prideaux, Dean of Norwich, to Nottingham.

As I owe my Deanery to you, I pray you to protect me in the just discharge of my duties. I have lately been forced to expel one of the minor canons of this church, and enclose my sentence against him. The crime of which he is charged has been proved by many witnesses to have been committed for seven years past, but, notwithstanding its abominable nature, he finds here many abettors, including Mr. Davy, the Recorder of Norwich, "a hot-headed, weak man," and because they think they can have no redress from the Bishop (from whom they ought to seek it if I had done anything wrong in this matter, he being our Visitor), they are now contriving to bring it by way of petition before the Queen and Council. To bring so filthy a cause before her Majesty is a great affront; but I thought well to mention the matter to you and ask for your favour.

_Sentence of the Dean of Norwich against John Stukeley, one of the minor canons of Norwich._

_States that Stukeley was charged with having long committed acts of indecency in the presence of women; that the Dean has consulted with the Archdeacon of Norfolk and one of the prebendaries, and other learned persons. Judges the crime proved, and that owing to the long practice of it, it is a case for expulsion. Declares Stukeley expelled accordingly._

_P. ¾. Read in the Chapter House at Norwich in the presence of John Stukeley and subscribed by the Dean on 22 Aug., 1702. Witnessed by Stephen Searle, Clerk of the Chapter and notary public. Ibid, 69A.*

4 Sept. Bath.

Hedges to the Earl of Rochester.

The Queen has granted a commission to Captain Jones as major. The gentry here are very pressing to have the meeting of Parliament postponed for about ten days. All here are well disposed to have it done, and I hope Lord Secretary Nottingham's answer will favour the change.

Same.

Royal Warrant to the Attorney of Solicitor General.

The Master and Wardens of the "mystery and Company of Pewterers of our City of London" have shewn by petition that the pewterers of the City and suburbs were incorporated by letters patents in the time of King Edward IV and thereby invested with divers powers and privileges and authorities for the good regulation and government of the said mystery. This charter was confirmed by several Kings and Queens and extended by Charles I and Charles II. Being apprehensive that some question as to these grants might arise, and being anxious to keep their powers for correcting all false and deceitful workers and sellers of defective pewter, they want some further powers and encouragement, and ask for confirmation of their former powers and authorities, and the addition thereto of such others as may seem requisite for the better government of the mystery. Prepare a bill for our signature to pass the Great Seal incorporating the Pewterers as before and confirming their powers, with the addition of those fresh powers hereto annexed and such others as may be requisite. Insert in the bill the names hereunto annexed.

Pp. 2. Followed by:—

Clauses containing the desires of the Pewterers Company.

1. Confirmation of all former charters and powers, with words of incorporation and grant, to avoid all scruples.

2. That there may be a master and two wardens, to be chosen annually, and not less than 24, or more than 40, assistants to continue for life, and that the present master, wardens and assistants may be particularly named and appointed to those offices, and those for the future be chosen as hereinafter mentioned.

3. That the master and wardens or their deputies and any ten assistants shall make a Court and be called the Court of Assistants. All Courts shall be called by order of the master or wardens or their deputies, and due notice shall be given of all such intended Courts to all the assistants residing in London or the suburbs. This Court shall meet as often as there shall be occasion, and manage all the business of the Company.

4. A general Court of all the Company who are of the livery shall be held yearly on some day in the month of August to choose a master and wardens for the year following, who shall on the Thursday next before Michaelmas Day appear and be sworn by a Court of Assistants. If they do not appear, or refuse to hold, or be excused for any reasonable cause by the Court, the Company may proceed to a new election.

5. That on death or removal of a master or warden, his place be filled by an election by a general Court, which shall be summoned by the remaining master or wardens or warden.

6. That the wardens, or their deputies, and assistants may meet when they think fit, on due notice, and choose "out of the members of the Company that shall be of the livery of the said Company" so many as they shall judge necessary to be assistants for life. The total number of assistants at any time shall not exceed 40.

7. That the Court of Assistants may have power to remove the master and wardens or any of the assistants for just cause, and may “call such fit persons, members of the Company, to be of the livery of the Company as they shall think fit.”

8. That the Court of Assistants may choose the clerk and other officers of the said Company, and that Robert Taetlon [?], the present clerk, be clerk for life; and that his successor may hold office during good behaviour.

9. That the master, wardens and assistants and all who are of the livery of the Company may on due notice meet and, by vote of the majority present, make lawful bye-laws for the good of the Company.

The following are the present master, wardens and assistants*:

Master:—Robert Wood.
Wardens:—Richard Fletcher and Thomas Walterer [Watterer].

HEDGES to LORD WEYMOUTH.

Just after you left I heard from London that Lord Secretary Nottingham had summoned a meeting of the Committee of Council in London, and that they had agreed that October 20 might be a suitable date for Parliament to meet.

The Queen has ordered a Council to attend her to-morrow (Sunday) at 6 p.m.† I am sorry you went so soon, as we desire your presence, but if you cannot come I will make your excuses. I believe there will be no opposition unless from his Grace. You know who are here, and can best judge whether you need come.

HEDGES' LETTERS.

1. To Sir Philip Boteler.

I am sorry to hear there is a dispute between the Governor and Lieutenant-Governor of Tilbury. I will try to compose it when I return, but, meantime, I think that Mr. Boteler ought not to oppose the orders of the Governor, but, if injured, ought to complain in the proper manner.

2. To the Lord Privy Seal.

The Queen desires that the Lords of the Committee of Council meet at Lord Secretary Nottingham’s office as often as they think fit. Though they cannot be attended by a Secretary of State, the intelligence from abroad and particularly from the fleet will be laid before you, and Mr. Ellis and Mr. Warre will be ready to receive your directions. Pray inform the rest of the Lords of this. Parliament is proroged by proclamation to Oct. 20.

3. To the Earl of Rochester.

The Queen has signed a commission for Colonel Whitham.* Details. Repeats news as to prorogation of Parliament. It has greatly satisfied the members at Bath.

4. To the Vice-Chancellor of Oxford.

"I have moved her Majesty concerning a further allowance for the encouragement of the Academy, in which work you say that the University proposes to lay out 2,000l. at the least in building it; and that this work may not be delayed I find her Majesty very graciously inclined to gratify them in an additional allowance of 200l. a year, besides the advantage of the Equerry's place,† and your proposal for the said sum to be disposed of in this service by the University and not to be directly paid to M. Foubert is approved, though 'tis not yet time to press for an endowment."

In my opinion you will be as secure of good and punctual payment as if it were settled. At this time an endowment will meet with many difficulties, but this way there will be none; and when you are, as it were, in possession of an annual allowance, I hope hereafter an opportunity will be found for the settlement also, if it shall be thought requisite.

I have the favour of yours "with the verses, and will observe the directions, but I still want the Orator's speech in the Convocation House to make the Entertainment complete."

The QUEEN to the CHANCELLOR and PRIVY COUNCIL of SCOTLAND.

Several of those who have been nominated by us as Commissioners to treat for a Union between England and Scotland have high posts in Scotland. They are to meet at Westminster on 27 October next. During their absence from Scotland it is necessary, for the carrying on of the Government there, that there should be a sufficient quorum of the Council and of the Treasury and Exchequer remaining at Edinburgh. We therefore expect that such members of the Council, Treasury and Exchequer as are not nominated Commissioners for the Union will give their close and exact attendance at Edinburgh during the sessions of the Commissioners at Westminster, and that none of them will leave Scotland without our leave during the course of the said treaty.

In order to state the accounts of the Army and Navy and all sums paid to any foreign Prince since 5 November, 1688, we desire to have copies of all treaties, conventions and capitulations relating thereto. Please lay copies of these before us to be attested on oath on 23 Sept.

Documents relating to the Case of Rebecca Pride.

Petition of Rebecca, only daughter and heir of William, Lord Chandos, Baron of Sudely, deceased, shewing that:—

King Charles II granted to petitioner's father a pension of 200l. a year in consideration of his ancestors' services to the Crown and their losses. After her father's decease the grant was renewed to petitioner.

The pension was paid her by King Charles II and King James II, but not in King William III's time.

The loss of this pension and an infirmity in petitioner's eyes, which prevents her from getting work, have now reduced her to great poverty. She has exhausted her credit, and, were it not for charity, must have perished.

Prays for continuance of her pension. Her ancestors have served the Crown well.

Rebecca Pride to ———.

Trusting in your generosity, I remind you of your promise to read my petition to the Queen when she is alone, and get her Majesty to continue my pension or otherwise help me. You know my miserable condition.

P. ½. Dated. 8 Sept., 1702. Ibid, 72.

Same to ———.

"Though my heart is reedy to breack for want of monney to by bred," I am grateful for your promise of intercession on my behalf with the Queen. Pray acquaint the Queen that the good Lord Bridgwater spoke to the late King on my behalf and would have done the same to her Majesty had he been living. Pray get the Queen to consider how sad it is that a lord's daughter should have to beg for her bread, as I am forced to do. If her Majesty cannot give me my whole pension, pray ask her to let me have half and get me an order to Lord Kedalfen [Godolphin] for 500l., or what the Queen pleases till she returns from Bath. Without a positive order I am "still" starving. I have tired all my friends and now want bread.

Pp. 13. Ill spelt. Undated. (Hol.) S.P. Dom., Anne 1, 73. Enclosing:

A. Notes on the pedigree and services of William, Lord Chandos, deceased.

When the great Duke of Northumberland sought to put Lady Jane Grey, whom he had married to one of his sons, on the throne and to disinherit Queen Mary, Sir John Bridges and his brother raised a great body of horse, marched with them in defence of Queen Mary and proclaimed her Queen at Gloucester, Hereford and Oxford, and drew those counties to her assistance. He then joined the Queen with her little army, for which acts he was made Lord Chandos and Baron of Sudeley [Sudeley] Castle,* which last honour was before enjoyed by Sir Thomas Seymour, brother to the Duke of Somerset and Protector in the time of King Edward VI.

The title of Chandos I suppose he made of choice because one of his ancestors married the daughter and heir of Sir John Chandos, who attended King Edward III in his wars in France and was by him made a Knight of the Garter when that order was instituted, "whose arms of that family still quarters." [Queen Mary] also made him Constable of the Tower, and his brother, Thomas Bridges, lieutenant of it, which he was when, in the time of Queen Mary, the Princess Elizabeth was committed to the Tower, and Gardiner, Bishop of Winchester, and Bonner, Bishop of London, had by their artifices procured a warrant to be signed for her death. Thomas Bridges, having received it, took it immediately to the Queen at Whitehall and insisted, notwithstanding all opposition, in seeing the Queen at once, "which the Queen took from him and, in detestation of so horrid a plot, tore it in pieces in his presence," and bade him go back and take care of the Princess Elizabeth and she would save him harmless. "By this means that glorious Queen was preserved." The reward Thomas Bridges got for this was that those who aimed at the Princess Elizabeth's death got him turned out of the lieutenantship of the Tower and he was replaced by Sir Henry Bedingfield, "a strict Papist, and one of Gardiner and Boner's mettle." But after Queen Elizabeth came to the throne, she gave him the manors and demises of Chidleigh in Devon and promised to make him Baron of it. This, however, was prevented by his death.

[A note here adds—See Stow's Annals, Speed's Martyrs, Baker's Chronicle, and Fox's History.]

From this Thomas Bridges came in direct descent Henry, Thomas and Edward, and Edward's son was Sir Thomas

10 Sept. London. SIR ALEXANDER RIGBY and others to [NOTTINGHAM].

As your pre-occupation with great affairs may hinder you from perusing our printed case with the Great Duke of Tuscany, we have endeavoured to comprise it in as narrow bounds as possible. We beg for your favourable consideration and that you will intercede with the Queen for a decision. We hope that our brevity and "the respect which we bear to the dignity of the Great Duke" will not derogate anything from the justice of our cause.

The case of Rigby, Shepard and Plowman, depending with the Great Duke of Tuscany, presented to Nottingham.

In 1690 the aforesaid merchants established a partnership business for trade at Leghorn.

In 1696 they fitted out thence two ships and a sloop for Alexandria, the prime cost amounting to 11,000l., under the care of William Plowman. He embarked on the Philip and Mary, commander John Broom. "The captains of the ships having letters of mart, the crews going [on terms of] No purchase no pay, took several French prizes."

On their return William Plowman debarked at Messina and, returning towards Leghorn, was at Rome surprised and hurried to a dungeon at the instance of the Great Duke "on pretence that he was his subject and had committed piracy under his colours," whereas in fact Plowman was never a pirate or a subject, or even a denizen of Leghorn, and never made use of the Great Duke's colours. The prisoner was denied to answer, and was carried to Florence and there detained in a dungeon for thirty-two months. This not only ruined the prisoner himself, but overthrew the partnership, which, at that time, was in a prosperous condition, having gained in five years 81,945 dollars. Sir Alexander Rigby became greatly embarrassed at home, "nor did the calamity rest here; for, by the discredit the house fell under upon the news of Mr. Plowman's disaster, several merchants, their correspondents in London and elsewhere, extremely suffered in their reputations and interest and some were utterly undone."

The late King was informed of this injustice and demanded William Plowman's enlargement and damages; but he was kept prisoner and condemned to pay 47,000 dollars for prizes taken by Broom. The pretence was a promise said to be made by Plowman to his Highness that his ships should not molest the ships of France though in open war with England. The King then sent pressing letters for the relief of Plowman, but without result. His Majesty going to Holland, the matter went before the Lords Justices, who directed Sir Charles Hedges to peruse the case. He did so and concluded that the Great Duke had violated the laws of nations and his Majesty's prerogative, and was liable to make reparation. The Lords Justices transmitted the report to the Envoy at Florence that they might receive the Great Duke's final answer.

"The Great Duke, to prevent the good effect of this report and order, by his ministers and emissaries, prevailed on William Plowman, when in prison and despair, to resign his own partners' and other English merchants' goods to the disposition of the French consul at Leghorn, and to frame a petition to his Highness directly contrary to fact."

The Great Duke then set him at liberty, but never restored his effects, though he informed King William he was glad to be able to do so.

The partners, thus spoiled, conveyed their books and papers to England. Shepard and Plowman—breaking up house at Leghorn—came home. They and Rigby then petitioned the Crown [for redress], and several of the most considerable merchants on the Exchange also petitioned. A copy of their petition is annexed. Sir Lambert Blackwell, being then in London, confirmed their allegations. This was about July or August, 1701.

The King, on representations from the Lords Justices, ordered Sir Lambert Blackwell to demand reparation for these damages at Florence.

They have lost 40,000l., and pray for relief.

Pp. 2. Copy. S.P. Dom., Anne 1, 76. Annexing:—

A. Petition to the Lords Justices of several Merchants of London, shewing that:—

Petitioners are aware of the credit and trade which "Messrs.
Rigby, Shepard and Company" had established in Leghorn since 1690 and of how much they have suffered owing to their treatment in Tuscany. Their entire estate was overthrown, and they and their English correspondents seriously damaged, contrary to the privileges which they and other foreign merchants enjoyed at Leghorn and elsewhere.

They pray for such action by the Lords Justices as may protect English merchants from such treatment in the future.

William Ashurst, Sir William Gower, Sir Jeffrey Jeffereys,

Turkey merchants, two Dutch merchants, five Spanish merchants, nine Italian merchants, three Hamburg merchants, and two West India merchants (names given in each case). S.P. Dom., Anne 1, 76A.

10 Sept. 1702. COLONEL COLLIER to [NOTTINGHAM].

Nineteen French prisoners have been brought in, fishermen from Coutenville and Blanville, near Coutance. They say that most of the seamen of that country were sent away, some to Brest, some to "Rochford" and others to Port Louis, that they had diminished the guards on the coast, and that the Governor of Granville had taken in a great many of the guns that were planted near that place, that M. de Pontchartrain had written four several letters and that there were great hopes of peace.

There was a fight near here on the night of August 28, and on August 29 we saw a ketch and sloop being towed away in captivity by a French man-of-war of 20 or 22 guns. "Tis believed it was her Majesty's ketch the Martin, and we fear she had on board the officers and soldiers intended to complete Colonel Mordaunt's regiment and official letters for me or others. Lieutenant-Colonel Lewis Mordaunt, brother of the Colonel, fearing this, is going to England with my leave to solicit for release of the officers and soldiers or, failing that, to raise more. We need more men.

11 Sept. 1702. HEDGES' LETTERS.

1. To the Dutch Ambassadors.

I have your project for the renewal of the Treaties between this country and the States General, with the amendments which you propose. I will send them to those of the Commissioners authorised to treat with your Excellencies who are here, and send a copy to London to those of them who are there, and will try to get a full meeting and a decision as soon as possible. The Commissioners are scattered, owing to her Majesty being here.

2. To Richard Warre.

I return Mr. Methuen's letter, from which it appears that though the King of Portugal is well disposed to "enter into measures" with the Queen and her allies, the Imperial Ambassador in Portugal shows himself very indifferent in the matter, and says that the Emperor will not need Portuguese help. I am to direct you to have copies of that part of Mr. Methuen's letters sent to Count Wratislaw, or to send Mr. Ellis to inform the Count of the Imperial Ambassador's attitude in Portugal, to say what bad effect it may have, and to insist on the desirability of harmony and co-operation between those who represent in Portugal the Queen and her allies. Mr. Ellis is to urge him to write to Count Wallenstein on the matter, or else to procure him such instructions as shall be requisite in this behalf, and must assure Count Wratislaw that Mr. Methuen has orders to communicate every step he takes and to do nothing except in concert with the Imperial Ambassador in Portugal.

Before doing anything, lay this before the Lords of the Committee and take their advice as to which course to pursue; obeying any additional instructions which they may give. As it is important that the English and Imperial envoys should act together, I send instructions to that end to be sent to Mr. Methuen. Send them as soon as you hear from Count Wratislaw that Count Wallenstein will do the like with him.

3. To the Lords of the Committee of Council.

Sir George Rooke should, the Queen thinks, be at once informed that M. Chateau-Regnaud* is returning home with the Spanish Plate Fleet. Consult with the Lord Admiral’s Council. They are to send extracts of all the news which they receive on this matter. The same news and extracts should be sent to Sir C.
Shovell, and, as it is important that he should be as strong as possible, the Queen thinks that he should be authorised to order
Captain Good, who commands the five ships cruising off Cape Clear, to join him if he thinks it necessary. I have written to Sir G. Rooke. Details.

4. To Sir George Rooke.

We have from Mr. Methuen the good news of your taking the Fort la Rota and Port St. Marie’s on the 15th and 16th of August, the first being the same day that Prince Eugene beat the French in Italy, and that my Lord Marlborough forced the French to make a very disorderly retreat in Flanders; and we are very impatient to hear of your further success. Chateau-Regnaud* is returning with the galleons which, it is thought, are intended for Cadiz, as you will find by the enclosed advices. I have no particular orders or instructions for you, but only to inform you of it, and am sure you will make proper use of it.

Royal Warrant [to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland].

On 25 April last we ordered by letters that the men and horses of the two troops of dragoons of Colonel Charles Ross’s regiment should fill up and recruit the other six troops of his regiment designed for service in Holland; and that the officers of the said two troops should go to Ireland and recruit those troops there and be allowed three months to complete them, to begin from 1 May last. You tell us that the Paymaster General of Ireland is not sufficiently warranted by those letters to pay the commissioned and non-commissioned officers of the said two troops from the day they embarked from Ireland to the said first of May,

* See p. 186 note.
1702. which was intended. Order the said Paymaster to pay them from their embarkation to that date, and thenceforward; and to continue the commissioned and non-commissioned officers of the said two troops on the rolls as if they had not been absent.

P. ¾. S.P. Signet Office 15, pp. 69, 70.

12 Sept. Bath. Royal Warrant to [the Paymaster General and others].

By letters of 1 June, 1702, we ordered five regiments commanded by Colonels Farrington, Gibson, Stringer, Lord Mohun,* and Sir R. Temple to be sent to Ireland to replace five regiments which we had ordered for service at sea, and directed that they [i.e. the regiments sent to Ireland] should be paid by our Paymaster General here according to the usual allowance from the time when they were raised till the time when the other five regiments were embarked from Ireland, and should be paid, (English pay) after that date by the Paymaster General of Ireland until they should embark for that country. The officers of these regiments have, by a memorial to the Lord Lieutenant, shewn that they have incurred large expenses in marching their men to the sea-side, and replacing deserters (other details), and pray for relief. On this memorial the Deputy Receiver General of Ireland, Sir William Robinson, reports (and the Lord Lieutenant concurs in the report) that if the pay of field staff and commissioned officers [is made to] commence on 10 March last (being the date of the captains' and subalterns' commissions) and that of the non-commissioned officers on 1 April following, and if private soldiers be allowed as full in each company and regiment and paid from 20 April. 1702, it will be sufficient to make good these expenses to them. Moreover, one hundred and thirty men were taken from Colonel John Gibson's regiment to recruit the regiments designed for service at sea under the Duke of Ormond's command, and an extra 260l. should be paid to Colonel Gibson for completing his regiment.

We direct the Muster-Master General in England to muster and allow the field, staff and commissioned officers of these regiments, and also the non-commissioned officers and privates as recommended in Sir William Robinson's report, and the Paymaster General of England to state and pay these officers and men as recommended therein up to the date when the five regiments ordered from Ireland left the country. After that date the five regiments sent to replace them in Ireland are to be on the Irish establishment and paid accordingly. The Paymaster General of England to pay Colonel Gibson 260l.

Same. Same to [the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland and] the Commissioners of Accounts and Barons of the Exchequer, &c.

to Ireland. Proceeds:—The whole expense thereof is £2,060l. 6s. 2d. clear of poundage and pells' fees, whereof 654l. 14s. 2d., being the price of provisions delivered for the men and horses, should be charged to the accounts of the regiments, and the remainder, being really for freight and transport, should be paid out of the Irish revenue. Order the Receiver General of Ireland to charge the said 654l. 14s. 2d. to the account of these four regiments; and pay the remainder, with the usual allowance of poundage and pells' fees, to Thomas Putland, to be paid over by him to Alderman William Allen, John Day, Captain Thomas Breton and the other owners of the freight.

P. 3. S.P. Signet Office 15, p. 72. Followed by:—

Sir William Robinson, Deputy Receiver General of Ireland, to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland.

I have, in pursuance of your Excellency's command, got from Alderman William Allen of Chester and Mr. John Day of Bristol an account of their expenses [details given] in provisioning and transporting the regiments of Farrington, Stringer, Mohun and Temple to Ireland and for freight of Colonel Rosse's horses, including the charge for exchange on so much of those expenses as was paid in England. In the detailed account herewith the cost of provisions, 654l. 14s. 2d., which is chargeable to the accounts of these regiments, is separated from the cost of transport, 1,405l. 12s. 3d. [sic], including 50l. to Captain Thomas Breton, a disbanded officer who is in great distress. The 1,405l. 12s. 3d. should be paid out of the revenue at large of Ireland with the usual fees of poundage and pells.

Detailed account follows shewing how the sums of 654l. 14s. 2d. and 1,405l. 12s. 3d. are made up. Farrington's and Stringer's regiments went from Chester and Mohun's and Temple's from Bristol.

1. To M. [Von] Vrybergen.

Your two of the 10th concerning the Three Friends and containing a memoir for the Queen have been laid before her. Every effort will be made to provide that the ships and goods belonging to the subjects of the United Provinces which may be brought into her Majesty's ports as prizes shall be treated with the same consideration as if they belonged to her Majesty's subjects. Orders have been sent to the Court of Admiralty to hear and despatch them with as little delay and at as small an expense as possible. But as they are now under trial they must take the course of their trial according to the laws of England. The Queen cannot be informed of the fact otherwise than by the Judge of the Court of Admiralty, and he is obliged to hear all parties interested. She will direct him to send in a faithful report based on the evidence of both sides. Although the Court will no doubt shew all respect to the interests of her Majesty’s allies, yet her Majesty will, if necessary, direct a rehearing of the cases before the Privy Council. Friendly expressions.

2. To the Vice-Chancellor of Oxford.

I have received yours of the 10th, with the Orator’s speech. What you propose to do to thank the Queen for her bounty is very proper, and as you ask me to do it in the name of the University I shall think it an honour to do so.

P.S.—I received an Order of Council relating to priority; but you do not tell me what the University want done in that matter. Please acquaint Dr. Charnock with it.

3. To Dr. Bramston.

As to the Dutch claims in respect of the Three Friends and the claims of Tourlon and Abraham le Coudier of Amsterdam now depending in the Court of Admiralty:—Before I give you orders, tell me how those cases stand and whether the Queen can do anything for the satisfaction of those persons. I know you will restore where possible. Decide the cases as quickly and cheaply as you can.

Yours of the 11th. I will do my best that Lord Raby’s precedent be used in your case. “I had despatched the instructions before this time but that a doubt is arisen concerning kissing the hand of the Electress of Hanover; for if no instruction be given in that particular” I think it will put a difficulty on your lordship; and there is no less hardship in giving it positively one way or the other. On the one hand it is doing too much, and the other it is denying her a respect that, as I am informed, has been paid by others, “though I think it has never been done by any who had a character.” I have written for the opinions of the Earl of Nottingham and Mr. Cresset, but cannot hear from Mr. Cresset yet. As you are ready, I will send your instructions to-morrow and send after you further instructions on this point when I hear from him. Mr. Cresset will not go to Berlin as yet, and I hope he may be able to set you right in this. He is "a worthy, honest gentleman," and you may take his opinion on the matter; and if he thinks it necessary I will send you instructions accordingly. I have already sent him orders to show you all the respect due to your lordship's quality and character. I have heard of the Duke of Zell's illness, but no alteration can be made upon that account. If he dies, instructions will be sent after you; or, failing them, take Mr. Cresset's advice.

4. To the Earl of Rochester.

The Queen directs you to command all the officers in England who have commands in Ireland to repair at once to their posts, where she thinks they should be at this time, and that leave be not given to any such officers to come thence except such as are chosen members of the present Parliament. This order may be published in the Gazette if you think well.

We have the good news this morning of the surrender of Landau and the taking of St. Christopher's.

Rejoicings &c. St. Christopher's was surrendered upon the first attack, but we have no details yet.

5. To Sir George Rooke.

We have heard of the death of Major-General Selwin [or Selwyn], late Governor of Jamaica, and, two days since, of the death of Colonel Brewer, who was next in command of the forces to Selwyn. You know what a loss these men are, and how necessary it is to have the best we can to command the forces. Therefore, when you are sending thither the detachment which you are instructed to send, consider the matter with the Duke of Ormond, and his Grace must send competent officers in command of the forces there, the Queen not having yet chosen a Governor.

We are now assured that M. Chateau-Regnau, with the galleons, intends for Cadiz unless he meets with any advice of our fleets being there that may make him alter his course.

We have an account this day from Bristol that Colonel Coddington on July 4th took the French part of the island of St. Christopher's, so that whole island is now in our hands. To-day also came the good news of Landau being surrendered to the Imperialists.

Hedges' Letters.

1. To the Duke of Ormond.

I have yours of 28 August from the camp near Port St. Mary's (being now in attendance on her Majesty, and Lord Nottingham at Burley), with other letters from the fleet. The Queen observes from these that there is like to be greater difficulty and, so, more time spent on this expedition than at first expected; however, she still hopes for success. But if you do not succeed, and the ships have not suffered much damage and are in a condition to undertake anything else on the way home, the Queen desires you and Sir George Rooke to consider in a Council of War what may be attempted according to the Queen's former instructions on any place on the coast of France or Spain on your return from Cadiz, and put it in execution. The Queen is extremely pleased with the bravery of her officers and soldiers and with your Grace's conduct, "which I wish may be always successful."

* This letter is not signed by Warre, but is the first in an entry book (No. 146), many of the entries in which are signed by him. He was at this time Under-Secretary to Lord Secretary Nottingham.

† In full "The Lords of the Committee of Council." I do not think it necessary to repeat this every time. Warre also states every time that he writes in the absence of Lord Secretary Nottingham. Apparently he wrote the letters which Nottingham would have written if he had been at the Council.

Count Wratislaw has complained of great excesses committed by your troops at the taking of Port St. Mary’s, and especially

* The letter is entered as dated from Whitehall.
† Entered as addressed to Sir George Rooke; but, from internal evidence in this and the last, must, I think, have been intended for Hopson.
by some of the general officers, whose names are mentioned. The Queen directed the complaint to be laid before her in a Committee of Council. I send further the Queen's command to your Grace to examine strictly into these charges and proceed accordingly against the offenders, and to restore any private property found on land which has been pillaged. Sir George Rooke has been directed to do the like as to any private property found at sea in ships under his command. As to courts martial, the Queen leaves you discretion, relying on you to protect the honour of the service and the nation. She greatly resents the alleged violence. I send you a copy of Sir George Rooke's instructions, in order that you may be fully informed in the matter.

1. The Queen to the Duke of Ormond.

Refers to the complaints of Count Wratislaw especially against Sir Henry Bellasyse and Sir Charles Hara. It is not for the Queen's honour that persons accused of such offences should remain in her service. Proceeds:—On receipt of this examine strictly into the complaint (which is sent you) against Hara, Bellasyse and any other of the land officers against whom complaints may be brought, and, if, on inquiry, you find the complaint well grounded, break or suspend them.

Take all possible care, by issuing your orders, for the finding and restoration of private property pillaged and still on land; and publish this order so that the owners, on making out their claims, may have restitution.

2. Count Wratislaw's memorial to Hedges.

I have to inform you of great disorders committed at the taking of Port St. Mary's, of which I have just heard by letters from the fleet. Lieut.-General Bellasis* and Major-Generals Haro [Hara] and Sparr were the first to shew their avarice, which caused the troops to think that, after such an example by their Generals, everything would be permitted. The pillage was horrible and is estimated at more than one million of the standard of the country. The Duke of Ormond was indignant, and has issued strict orders to prevent such offences in future; but I apprehend that in spite of all his zeal for the good of the allies and the precautions which he may take, the offence will be committed again if occasion arises, unless the Queen, at my humble request, expresses her anger at it, and cashiers or suspends officers who give such a bad example to her soldiers. You will see how necessary and just this is, Sir, "for how will the Spaniards be able to believe that we have just rescued them from slavery to France (as we promise in the manifesto) if we commence the business by such great violences. Far from making them favourable to us, we shall drive them more than ever into an alliance with France."

* The name is spelt in many different ways. The owner of it himself writes "Bellasyse."
Nor can I conceal from you that many people, from malice or some other reason, are seeking to make everything difficult or impossible for the Duke of Ormond in this expedition. He alone, with admirable zeal and courage, surmounts all difficulties and at last resolved to attack the fort of Santa Cruz, which is one of the Puntals. But as all his efforts will be in vain if the British Admirals (as they say they will) come home and do not stay at Cadiz for the winter (before which time the place will hardly be reduced), I beg for the Queen’s orders that the Admirals may stay there for the winter, if not with all their ships, at least with some of them, which can remain there in safety, at all events after they have conquered one or both Puntals. The Portuguese will provide supplies if they cannot be supplied from here. It is needless to tell the Queen and Council how necessary it is to support that enterprise. The glory of her fleet and arms in her first effort is at stake, “the hopes of her allies and particularly those of the Emperor, my master, the terror [spread] amongst the Spaniards, the broken courage of the enemy, the safety of your commerce, the satisfaction of Parliament and the nation, the design in Italy for next year, that against the Indies—all in fact depends on the success of this enterprise.” I feel sure the Queen will press it on, and will order her fleet to spend the winter there, making arrangements for the subsistence of the fleet and troops.

I pray for information on the Queen’s pleasure in this matter, so that I may inform the Emperor, my master, whose resolutions and plans depend on those which the Queen takes.

Pray shew this letter to Md. [my Lord] Godolphin, who will understand the importance of the first and second points mentioned in it.

I send the Queen’s instructions to you to remain at Cadiz to support the land forces under the command of the Duke of Ormond, which is judged to be of great importance for her Majesty’s service. The great ships may be laid up at Lisbon and provisions supplied from thence; wherefore send four or five ships there for supplies; moreover, the Queen is taking steps to supply you from hence. It is hoped the Dutch may be persuaded to stay with you. Assist them all you can to that end. and I am to write to-night to Holland for new instructions for them. I hope they will agree in this as they did in the matter of sending a detachment of Dutch ships for the Streights if there had been occasion. But, whatever the Dutch do, you are to continue there. The Queen relies much on your prudence and conduct, and knows you realise the importance of the expedition on Cadiz.

The Queen has been informed of disorders committed by several land officers at Port St. Mary’s, and has ordered the 1702.

Duke of Ormond to make strict inquiry and to restore all property so taken and found on shore. You are to make diligent search to see if any of it has been taken on board ship and, if any has been found, you are to send it on shore, so that it may be restored by the Duke. The Queen is deeply offended at the violence and rapine of her land officers. Give all the help you can for discovering their plunder. I send copies of the instructions to the Duke of Ormond Details.

Instructions to Sir George Rooke.

To remain at Cadiz during the winter and to assist the land forces unless the land officers “agree that there is no hopes of success at Cadiz and give over that attempt.” His former instructions in regard to the detachment for the West Indies are to hold good.

26 Sept. LORD BROOKE to [NOTTINGHAM].

I am too ill to join the bearer, Mr. Peter Francia, merchant of the City, in waiting on you. He and his factors and correspondents have considerable effects in the Canaries, which they want to bring home if they can. Several merchants have, I

* i.e. the difference between 2,959 and 6,096.
believe, got leave, on petition, to bring home some pipes of Canary. He hopes to have the like favour.

26 Sept. The Prince's Council to Nottingham.

Sir C. Shovell told us that amongst the prisoners lately taken by him there were five or six persons suspected to be English, Irish or Scotch. We have had them examined by Dr. Bramston, Surrogate to the Judge of the High Court of Admiralty, and send the examinations. We think they will hardly be found guilty, and desire leave to put them on board the ships bound for the West Indies to serve the Queen.

A. Examination of James Latouche of Brest.

Deponent lived at Brest, St. Malo or Concalle in Brittany, where he was born; and so did his parents. His parents were French by birth. Deponent's grandfather was an Irishman, and La touch is the name of a land in Brittany belonging to the deponent, by which he is called after the French manner. His real name is Cartier, though he is not known by it. Deponent set out from Brest on 2 September with his ship the St. Joseph, with a commission from the Admiral of France to cruize against the enemies of the State. Was captured on 4 September by some Englishmen eighteen leagues W.S.W. of Ushant. His captor was the Russian Admiral Shovell has deponent's commission. Deponent learnt to know a little English by going to Ireland about sixteen years ago to learn it. He was at Cork about two years ago as a merchant in a Flemish ship called the Diana of Brest. Pierre St. O'Brien, whom the deponent believes to be a Frenchman, was his second captain. Robert Rippert, another of his company, is said to be a Scotchman, and John Berry, another of his company, is said to be an Irishman, and William Tilley, another on board, has declared himself an Englishman, but deponent had orders to put them aboard some English ship that should be ransomed. He had orders to [take] ransom [for] any ship he should take as there were so many English ships of war on the coast. William Jones, who was on board the deponent's ship, is an Englishman who escaped from England. [Details.] Deponent, sixteen years ago, lived at Cork with one Dilley and went to school with one Dixon.

B. Examination of Peter St. Aubin*.

He was born at Pluballet, within four leagues of St. Malo. His father was an Irishman and captain in Colonel Hamilton's regiment of foot under the Duke of Monmouth. After his father was killed, deponent, being about two years old, was carried by his mother into Ireland. He lived there for fifteen years and then, fifteen years ago, went with his uncle and brother to France. Has ever since lived at Brest or St. Malo, and his wife and children now live there. Was second captain of the St. Joseph referred to in the foregoing deposition.

Details as to capture, as in foregoing, and as to the nationality of Berry, Tilley, Rippet [or Rippert]† and Jones, whom they had orders to put on an English ship. Other details.

c. Examination of William Tilley.

He was born at Gaden in Warwickshire. His father was a labourer there. About March last went to Bristol. Met John Cocks there, who had a bark stopped at Morlaix, because she had some brandy which had not been entered. Agreed to go with Cocks to Morlaix in a French ship to bring his bark back; was delayed a fortnight at Morlaix and then told by Cocks that he could not get his vessel discharged. Went to Roane [Rouen] to get passage for England. Failed, and went to Brest. There, after six weeks, met Captain La Touch, who promised to take him aboard and to put him on board the first English or Irish ship that should be ransomed. Was to have no wages but only his victuals.

d. Examination of Robert Rippet.

Was born at Kirkaldy [Kirkcaldy]. Lived there till ten years old. Came to London and thence went to Newcastle and back. Bound himself to Captain Atkinson, a Guinea man, and went to Guinea. Returned and went on a voyage to Faro [Alexandria]. Their vessel was lost in the Bay of Biscay, and deponent and others saved themselves in the long boat. They came to St. John de Luz and thence to San Sebastian. Went thence in a Dutchman for Amsterdam; and from thence came to London. Went thence to Guinea in a Guinea ship called the Gamboa galley. On the Guinea coast she was taken and plundered by some pirates, and deponent and others made their escape into the woods. Returning, they found that the ship had been left by the pirates, and they traded on the coast for elephant's teeth; but, not being able to get enough, they "took in negroes and sailed away for Barbadoes and from thence to Jamaica; but missing the island they sailed about 300 leagues to the leeward and, endeavouring to get up to Jamaica, they beat up and down for two or three months and spent all their provisions, and then the negroes rose upon them, but being quelled several of them were killed and died, and so they put into the Havana,” where ship and negroes were seized by the Governor. Got passage thence to Brest in a French ship in July last, and was then put on board the privateer, where he was captured, to be placed on the first English ship that should be ransomed. Was to have no wages, or share in any capture made.

E. Examination of Robert Berry.

Was born about three miles from Cork and lived there till Cork was taken. Then entered Colonel Colt’s regiment and served there till it was broken at Tilbury. Then went to Bristol, to Newfoundland and thence with fish to Oporto. Gave his fish to a surgeon to cure his leg, which was hurt. His ship left before he was well, so, on talk of war, he took passage in a Dutchman, which pretended to go to Holland, but put in at Brest. There she was seized and deponent put on board a privateer &c., as foregoing.

CAPTAIN HOVENDON WALKER to [NOTTINGHAM].

I remain here, since I parted from Sir G. Rooke on Friday, with the victuallers left behind to complete the provisions to be taken on board the transport ships, which have only now been put on board them. I want water to go to Barbados, and shall call for it at Madeira. Many things are wanting for the soldiers and many stores for the men-of-war, which we could not supply well from the fleet. Injury to the Chichester. Not serious.

28 Sept. LORD HATTON to NOTTINGHAM.

[Guernsey.] I cannot do my duty to the family of Mr. Martin, late Lieutenant Bailiff of Guernsey, but by sending you the enclosed depositions regarding the charge against Lieutenant la Boulay.* Other papers herewith shew, what is the fact,—indeed it is not denied—that he was drunk in the town when he ought to have been commanding the guard in the Castle. Colonel Mordaunt, it seems, thinks it is enough penalty to remove the unruly officer to another garrison. La Boulay, I am told, intends to remove here, so that the case may be tried by the Royal Court of Guernsey, knowing that they can only fine him and that they can find nothing to levy on. The only proper punishment is to cashier La Boulay. This will keep the other officers there in some awe, which is necessary. He and other officers have committed similar outrages in recent years. I take it to be my duty to protect the inhabitants of the island from such offences.

A. Complaint and depositions in the case of Lieutenant La Boulaye.

The complaint was laid on 29 August, 1702, by Catherine Renouf, widow of Jean Martin, and by Peter and Laurens, her children, before Messire Edmond Andros, Kt., Seigneur de Saumarez and Bailiff of Guernsey, and in the presence of Thomas De Lisle, John Careye, William Le Marchant, jun., Eleazar Le Marchant and Amice Andros, jurors of the Royal Court.

The witnesses depose to La Boulay having on 25 June at night come with the guard to the door of Jean Martin, who was ill and called him by foul and abusive names, called on him to come down and that he would kill him and all his generation.

This allegation is corroborated by many witnesses, whose evidence varies in small details. Their names are William De Putron, Henri du Pré, Samuel Roland, Aaron Guillaume, Jean Poulet, Thomas Dobre, Marie Henry, Jean Perchard Fitzs Clement, Pierre Le Mesurier, Marie Wats, Marie Luce, Elie Brett, Jean Bouillon, Cathrine Desaigmoig [?] and E. Roland.

In all pp. 51/4 (large). Copies. The depositions (except the last four) were taken on 5 September, 1702. Ibid, 36A.

The last four depositions are on small pieces of paper, all dated Guernsey, 7 September, 1702. Ibid, 36B, C, D and E.

28 Sept. JOSTAH BURCHETT to NOTTINGHAM.

Admiralty Office. Sends copies of a letter received from Captain Beaumont and of orders sent to him.

* Also spelt La Boulaye.
A. Captain Beaumont to Josiah Burchett.

Only three of the enemy's ships remain in Flemish Road, before Dunkirk. The rest have gone in. On Monday, 21st, in the evening we saw eight sail of them, as usual, but could not, owing to bad weather, look into the road again till Thursday. Then we found only three there. I think that, as the wind and weather have been, they could not go to sea, but go in they might, and there I take it for granted they are. Since then we have stood very near in, and I think, see more ships' masts in the basin than we used to do. If I thought they had gone northward, I would follow them; but my orders are to lie here till further orders. To do so now that nights are long and the weather bad is dangerous for her Majesty's ships, and can do no service on the enemy. If the ships were cleaned and sent cruising, or victualled to bring home the Northern fleets, it might be well. This is submitted with respect.

I have now with me the Tilbury, Winchester and Blackwall and two Dutch. I send the Worcester with this and to wait for orders.

P.S.—Captain Wyatt, whom I sent into Gravelines pits to reconnoitre, has returned. From what he saw there is no doubt but that the ships which were in Flemish Road have gone in, except the three already mentioned.

B. Copy of Orders sent by express by the [Prince's] Council to Captain Beaumont off Dunkirk on 28 September, 1702.

Notwithstanding what you say we have reason to think that M. Ponty [Pointis] has got out of Dunkirk with most of his squadron. We have therefore ordered the Worcester to go back to you, and the Dartmouth and Kingfisher to join you from the Downs, the Crown from the Nore, and the Rochester as soon as she has conveyed the Earl of Winchelsea to Holland. As soon as you get these orders take every possible step to satisfy yourself whether the French squadron has or has not got out of Dunkirk. If you find it has, you shall, as soon as the aforesaid ships join you, leave such a force behind you as, with the two Dutch ships there, will be strong enough to contain the three French ships in the road and, taking from them such provisions as they can spare, lie in such a station as you think best for the protection of the ships and convoys coming from the East country with naval stores against any attempt that may be made upon them. These convoys have orders to come from the Sound the last of this month.

If you are quite assured that M. Ponty [Pointis] has gone in with his ships, and that he will not come out again, you are to leave only such ships as may be sufficient to keep in those three ships and to return with the rest of your squadron to the Downs, that there they may be supplied with provisions.

But, in such case, order the commander in chief to send you immediate information if M. Ponty [Pointis] comes out into the road; and if you hear he has done so, repair without further orders to Dunkirk and use your best endeavours to prevent his going to sea.

Hedges to Lord Treasurer Godolphin.

In his last letter Mr. Stepney says that having had some discourse with the envoy of Sweden at Vienna, he finds this a proper juncture to send a Minister to the King of Sweden, "that Prince being inclinable to part with some troops to the Allies and more disposed to hearken to terms of peace than he has been at any time since he took the field. If her Majesty sends anyone there seems to be two qualifications requisite for him, vizt., experience in business, and the High Dutch and Swedish languages. I can think of none more proper to be employed than Mr. Stepney, who is within five days' journey and at present has no extraordinary business at Vienna." You know his capacity, and I find he will readily obey the Queen's commands, though he does not much desire to go into Poland. I have sent his letters to Lord Secretary Nottingham to be laid before the Committee of Council, and, if they approve, have desired his lordship to send an account by this night's post to the Earl of Marlborough, with copies of Mr. Stepney's letters. If his Excellency thinks it for the service he, who is the best judge, may either forward some instruction to Mr. Stepney, or send his views on the whole matter to be laid before the Queen.

We have no news from the fleet, but the French letters say that the Duke of Ormond is posted between the Bridge, Suasso, and the town of Cadiz, and that the town is in great want of provisions.

I send you news from Brest, but do not believe that Chateau-Regnaud was so near as they make out. Had he been so, we should have heard of him.

Josiah Burchett to Nottingham.
Sends extract* of a letter just received from Commander St. Loe at Plymouth.

Five lines. Signed. Endd. S.P. Dom., Naval 6, 133. Enclosing:—

Commander St. Loe to Burchett.

I have made further inquiry regarding the galleons of John Fermen, one of the prisoners lately taken by a Dutch privateer on a French fireship [fireship]. He is a Dunkerker and calls himself a Catholic, but expressly informs as follows:—About 14 August he heard eight guns firing at some ship belonging to the galleons, himself being to leeward. Could see nothing owing to fog. They were off the banks of Newfoundland, and, by their course, steered for Placentia. This agrees with other accounts. Though steering for Placentia, the galleons really intended, he says, for Cape Race [Race] to get provisions and men, which they badly wanted; and that they did not go into Placentia because the entrance is narrow and the galleons steer very wildly. Moreover, the harbour is bad, but that at Cape Race is able to entertain a great fleet.

He says that a packet was sent to France from the Banks of Newfoundland to say where the galleons were left. Two days later the aforesaid fireship [fireship] was sent on the like errand and fell in with some French men-of-war, but lost them; and in looking for them the fireship fell in with the Dutch privateer. Some letters were thrown overboard, which he believes were advices to France.

He says that Montezuma died in the Havanna and that Count Nermond and Count Rosemadack (both flags) are also dead. Otherwise he confirms the accounts previously sent. I have given him a small gratification, with promise of more if what he says is true and any of the galleons, by his means, fall into our hands. Other details. I believe that he is telling the truth and that the galleons are still abroad and submit that it would be well if two ships of war were sent to cruise off Santa Cruz at the Canaries and wait for them; for I believe they will make for that place for refreshment. When they are sighted one cruiser should leave to inform the squadron and the other should dog them till he can find where they are.

detachments that are sent against him. "All we have considerable" from sea is that one of the galleons is arrived at St. Lucar. If this be so, it is probable that the others have gone for the coast of Spain, though the account which I received last night from Captain St. Loe appears to show they are not so near. Lord Nottingham has a letter from Port Louis of 26 September saying they were in a miserable condition and not able to defend themselves. I hope Sir C. Shovell, who, I hear, has gone out, may find them if they come for France.

P.S.—I suppose you know the Lords of the Committee are preparing to send recruits to the Duke of Ormond.

SAME to the EARL OF CARLISLE.

I sent the lists of Deputy-Lieutenants to Secretary Hedges, who has returned them approved; but I did not include Mr. Henry as well as Mr. George Fletcher (as in your list), as you said this was a mistake. I did not include Mr. Andrew Huddleston for the reason formerly given, in which your lordship seemed to agree.

Nottingham to the Commissioners for Sick and Wounded.

Yours of the 2nd, with letters of the Count de Mornay and M. de Pontchartrain, have been considered by the Committee of Council. I am directed to tell you:—

You should inquire into the treatment of French prisoners here, and especially at Portsmouth. The Queen desires that they may be treated as prisoners of war should be, and as well as is consistent with their safe custody, that no occasion may be given to the ill-usage of such of her subjects as may be unfortunately taken by the French.

He mentions two French privateer captains who are in irons at Southwark on suspicion of being English. Pray let me know the facts about them, that such steps may be taken as are just.

You may tell Count de Mornay that I am surprised at the list [he sends] of French vessels detained in Jersey, Guernsey and the Isle of Wight, because I had long ago sent orders to release all those which were there before the Declaration of War. I do not believe there are now any in those islands, but I will repeat the Queen’s orders; save only the Susanna of Cherbourg, who brought over spies, and whose captain has deserted her and never claimed her.

You may further tell him that the difference in number between the French prisoners here and the English in France is so great that they could not reasonably expect that the exchange should take place in the manner suggested, which is all for all; but that if the French will agree to exchange man for man of the same quality, this shall be done, and the ransom of the rest allowed on fair terms, which terms shall continue for restitution of prisoners hereafter taken.

The proposal for bringing all the English prisoners to Calais or St. Malo has great inconveniences to us, because the English prisoners now at Dunkirk, Rochfort &c. would have to march there; and we know, by experience in the late war, that many perished in so long a march. The French must therefore either appoint more places of embarkation or devise some better way of bringing the men to the ports “than by driving them thither as was practised in the late war.”

It seems very curious that the Governor of Bayonne should seize a number of English merchantmen and demand a ransom for them and give no account of it to the French Court. The circumstances of these merchants are such that they should not be made prisoners, and her Majesty insists on their being released. An answer on this point is expected at once, so that her Majesty may resolve on her action as to the French merchants and prisoners here, with regard to whose release the French desire a cartel to be settled.

lordship, which have come back from Bath with her Majesty's approbation. I have signed them.

Yours of 21 September re insufficient guard for prisoners has been sent to the Commissioners of Sick and Wounded (the proper officers). They say the guard has been so strengthened as to give you the security you desire.

7 Oct. COLONEL COLLiER TO NOTTINGHAM.

Jersey.

The Commissary of St. Malo, in compliance with a request which (promising similar treatment) I made to him, has sent back not only some gentlemen of this island who were taken when fishing just outside the harbour, but also Peter Seal, an English factor at Bilbao, who was stopped at St. Malo when trying to get home before the war, and Christopher Jones, who was commander of the Somerset, of Minehead, and was taken on July 13, when bound for London from Antigua with sugar, and says that his ship was retaken before he reached France; also Mr. Wybert, commander of the Betty [details], which was taken the 16th of July, but retaken in 18 hours, and two hands taken on the Hopewell of Lancaster, which was taken coming from Port O Port [Oporto] and ransomed. The Commissary wrote very civilly asking that, in return, all such prisoners as were detained here when war was declared should be returned. For the return of the boat the gentlemen who came in her gave security at St. Malo's. We have four [French] merchants and two gentlemen detained here, the merchants being traders here since long before the war, but I cannot release them without fresh orders, [details] which please send.

[9 Oct.] PETITION to the QUEEN of THOMAS WATSON, D.D., Bishop of St. David's, shewing that:—

Some clergy and officers of petitioner's diocese, angry at his attempts to reform non-residence and other disorders complained of in his diocese, raised and spread many false and scandalous reports to make petitioner odious. They made use of that ill fame to present articles of simony and other pretended crimes against him. These were so presented to the Archbishop that he was "prevailed with" to cite petitioner to appear at Lambeth, and afterwards to pronounce sentence of deprivation, with excessive costs, against him, which his Judges Delegates confirmed.

The prosecution was wholly malicious, the witnesses untrustworthy, and the evidence insufficient to justify the sentence. The petitioner's witnesses were not allowed to give evidence, and several allegations material to his case were excluded by his Grace's agents and the delegates.

Prays for "a commission of review, with a clause of new matter directed to such noble peers, Bishops, Judges of the Common Law and Doctors of the Civil Law," as the Queen thinks fit to hear and determine the cause.

The Queen hears that great quantities of goods and money [details] have been pillaged from the Spaniards at Port St. Mary’s and elsewhere, and are on board the fleet and attendant ships. Some of these have already arrived and the rest are daily expected. The Queen is resolved that the strictest account of them be taken and none embezzled. She desires you to take the advice of her counsel in the Court of Admiralty, and, through your officers at the various ports, to lay hands on these goods when they arrive. If possible prevent their being put ashore, but if any of them are put ashore, have them arrested and put in safe keeping until further order. For doing this, you are to apply to his Royal Highness for letters of assistance to the sea and land officers on board the fleet and to the Lord Treasurer for orders to the Commissioners of the Customs to help you with their officers and agents if necessary. We have sent orders to all our sub-commissioners and agents to seize all goods and effects mentioned in your letter of directions to us when Sir George Rooke’s ships come in from Spain.

We send our advocates’ opinion as to procedure for obtaining and securing the plunder. We will enjoin care upon our officers and let you have constant reports.

In order to make more effectual discovery of what plundered goods are brought in her Majesty’s fleet now coming from Spain under the command of Sir George Rooke, it is our opinion that commissions of inquiry should issue from the High Court of Admiralty, together with warrants to arrest and secure such of the said goods as shall thereby be discovered. Those commissions and warrants should be directed to the Prize officers and other proper persons residing at the ports at which the said fleet, or any ships belonging to it, arrive.

20 Oct. SIR EDWARD NORTHEY (Attorney General) to [NOTTINGHAM].

In regard to the matters you proposed to me yesterday:—I find by the Petition of Right (3 Car. I) it is complained that several Commissions had issued under the Great Seal by which certain persons had been assigned Commissioners with powers to proceed within the land according to the justice of martial law against soldiers who should commit murder, robbery, felony, mutiny or other outrage or misdemeanour, and to try and execute them according to that law. The Commissions complained of were issued in time of peace, when martial law ought not to have been executed, but the petition admits that that law may be exercised in an army in time of war. Nevertheless, in all the Annual Acts passed during the late war for punishing officers or soldiers who should mutiny or desert, there is a declaration of Parliament saving to all men the right to be tried by their peers according to the known and established laws of the realm. This, being declared in time of war, seems to mean that even in time of war martial law cannot be exercised without an Act of Parliament. It remains to be considered:

(1) Whether these declarations of the Parliament against martial law extend to the Queen's forces out of the realm so that they cannot be subject to martial law there.

(2) Whether they apply to those forces so as to prevent persons from being tried by martial law here for offences committed out of the realm.

(3) Whether by virtue of the Annual Mutiny Act, martial law may be used to try other offences in the army than those (mutiny, sedition and desertion) specially mentioned in it.

I ask these questions because offences committed beyond seas cannot be tried by a jury here, nor can offences which are not offences against the common law, but against martial law. If these cannot be tried by Courts-Martial, they must go unpunished.

This matter is of such consideration that I do most humbly propose that these questions, with such others as your lordship thinks fit, be laid before all the Queen's "Counsell" in the law or a Committee of the "Privy Counsell" at which both the Chief Justices may be consulted. Their opinion will be of more use and authority than that of "councl" can be.

I give you this trouble lest the Queen’s service should be prejudiced by my sudden and single opinion on the questions proposed to me.

NOTTINGHAM’S LETTERS.

1. To the Prince’s Council.

The Earl of Peterborough has suggested that the twenty-two brass guns—24 pounders—and sixteen sakers taken on board the Neptune or Trident, and now in the Tower, might be of use for the Boyne in the West Indies. The Queen approves this. Receive his Royal Highness’s directions for orders to the officers of the Ordnance to put these guns on board suitable ships.

The Queen is willing that the Fubbs yacht should be ordered with the Earl to Jamaica if you have no objection to it. Take directions from his Royal Highness to sheathe her, or any other yacht which you send instead.

Pp. 1\textsuperscript{st}. S.P. Dom., Entry Book 104, pp. 139, 140.

2. To the Attorney General.

The Queen desires you to prepare a warrant with the heads of a charter for refounding the Hospital of the Savoy, with the clauses and powers mentioned in the accompanying report. Insert in the clause a reserving power to the Queen to permit the inhabitants of St. Mary de Strand parish to use the Savoy Chapel as formerly.

P. 4. Ibid, p. 140. Enclosing:—

Report to the Queen on the re-foundation of the Hospital of the Savoy.

\begin{tabular}{lrr} \hline
l. & s. & d. \\
\hline
The certain rents payable to the Savoy Hospital before it was dissolved were & 444 & 13 7 \\
The fines on renewing leases were at least & 100 & 0 0 \\
The burial fees for burials in the chapel were about & 15 & 0 0 \\
I think the hospital may be refounded to consist of a Master, a Chaplain and twenty poor widows, to be called “the Master, Chaplain and Poor of the Hospital of King Henry VIIth in the Savoy, founded by Queen Anne,” &c., with the clauses and powers usual in such cases. \\
The said master, &c., to be subject to such laws and ordinances as your Majesty thinks fit for the government of the hospital and its members. \\
The master and chaplain to be in Holy Orders, and to be constituted by your Majesty and your successors under the Great Seal on any avoidance. \\
The poor to be nominated by your Majesty and your successors under your sign manual on any vacancy. If your Majesty do not fill a vacancy within [blank] months, then the master to appoint to it.
\end{tabular}
The master, chaplain and poor to hold for life subject to the orders and to removal for misdemeanour or breach of the ordinances.

The poor to be removed by the master and chaplain and the master and chaplain by the Visitor.

The number of poor to be twenty, unless the Visitor decides that the revenue will support more.

The master to have 100l. a year and lodging and the chaplain 50l. a year and lodging. The poor to have 6d. a day and 40s. a year to buy a "gown of black cloth." Each of the poor to have a lodging. The rest of the revenue to be spent in officers' salaries and repairs, &c.

Repeats rule as to ordinances. Proceeds:—

That for the support of the Hospital your Majesty may be pleased to grant the said master, chaplain and poor and their successors for ever all the late site of the dissolved hospital and all its houses and buildings and lands, manors and revenues. The inhabitants of the parish of "St. Mary le Strand" have no parish church and have long used the Savoy Chapel as such and found a preacher there at their own expense and have petitioned to be allowed to continue to use it. I think this may be granted. The chapel is large enough for the needs of the inhabitants of that parish and of the Savoy precinct and for the said poor. Provision may be made by ordinance for the said parish touching the chapel.

Fitting lodgings should be provided for the master, chaplain and poor; but this is difficult because the room where the poor were formerly lodged is now used by your Majesty for a barrack for soldiers, and has been so for near 30 years. Another part is used as a prison for deserters and prisoners of war, and the greatest part of the grounds within the hospital is let on long leases by the late master and chaplains, only the master's house being unlet and in your Majesty's disposal, as are the barracks and prison buildings. If the use as barrack and prison is to continue, accommodation must be found for the poor. Sir Christopher Wren, Surveyor of your Majesty's Works, tells me that the barrack and prison are much out of repair and that it will need 1,500l. to repair them, and much more to equip them as a lodging for the poor. The rents due are not nearly sufficient for this purpose.

3. To the Lord Treasurer.

The plunder taken at Port St. Mary's, if marked and inventoried by Sir George Rooke, but not otherwise, may be taken ashore and stored in her Majesty's storehouses. Pray give orders accordingly.

As ordered on July 11 last I have considered the petition; and report that the petitioner laid down his commission as flag officer on her Majesty's constituting Mr. Churchill Admiral of the Blue, and that he was afterwards removed from his post as Commissioner of the Navy by her Majesty. I do not find that Admiral Killigrew and Sir Ralph Delavall refused to serve in their respective stations, as alleged in the petition; but, being left out of the Commission of the Admiralty and not employed at sea after 1693, King William gave them the pensions they now enjoy in consideration of their good services at sea.

Yours of yesterday. His Royal Highness has given order for the Solsdyke yacht to be fitted out to attend Lord Peterborough to his post as Governor of Jamaica. The Fubbs mentioned in your letter, is with Sir George Rooke.

The guns which his lordship desires carried to the Boyne are not fit for sea, and the Boyne is already gunned according to the Order in Council, and, without a fresh order, cannot be altered; nor do we know how these guns could be carried to the Boyne in the West Indies or how the guns on board of her could be brought thence; but if the Queen thinks it right that his lordship should have these guns her pleasure must be signed directly to the Master-General of the Ordnance.

The Queen has heard great complaints against Mr. Atwood, late Chief Justice, and Mr. Weaver, late solicitor of the Colony of New York. Send particulars of the charges and evidence against them, that the right proceedings may be taken. They have come from New York to Plymouth.

We have yours of the 19th with the petition of the Company trading to the Levant, asking for a convoy of four good ships to escort the fleet which they are about to send to Turkey. One of the merchants was with us this morning on the matter; but it is impossible that the number of vessels desired can be got together in twenty days, as the Company desire, as they are now employed in other services and are out of the reach of his Royal Highness's orders—either with Sir C. DEPOSITIONS by WILLIAM LANYON and others.

We, William Lanyon, jun., of Penzance, Edward Jones, of same, and William Paule, of Newlyn, say on oath:—

One Solomon Le Griel, a Frenchman, lived here over three years recently. He has said often that war would soon be and that he would do his best to ruin Penzance and the other towns bordering on the sea coast and the said port of Penzance (being in the Mount's Bay). We also say that Le Griel, being like to be questioned for these statements, got privately away, and set forth a privateer from Deip [Dieppe] to effect this design; but about ten days since was taken near Mount's Bay by a Dutch privateer, commanded by one Captain Garret, and carried into Falmouth, where he is now prisoner of war to the said captain. He has, we are told, there confessed that his design was to burn and plunder Penzance and the other towns in Mount’s Bay; and gives out that he shall soon have his liberty from the Dutch, and is well assured of another ship with which he will carry out his design of burning and plundering the said towns as aforesaid. We fear he will do so if liberated during this war.

P. 3. Signed by Lanyon, Jones (with his mark) and Pawle, and underwritten:—

We, the undersigned, know most of this deposition to be true and believe the rest to be true, the deponents being men of good reputation. We hope Le Griel will be kept prisoner during the rest of the war. Signed by Dan Hawke [or Hawkey], Mayor, and John Pellow, justice, and with seal of the town of Penzance bearing John Baptist's head on a charger.*

The COMMISSIONERS OF SICK and WOUNDED to the SECRETARIES of the ADNIRALTY.

We have considered the copy of a cartel between France and the States General for exchange of prisoners taken at land during the late war, and your information and that of Count de Mornay regarding the payments made by the Queen and by the French King to officers and seamen serving in their fleets. We tried to frame a scheme for a cartel according to these scales of wages, but the differences between them makes this difficult. The general principle in regard to ransom appears to be to ask about one month's pay; but we have suggested rates somewhat higher than this. [Details.] We have fixed the ransom for men in privateers as if they were in first-rate ships. This, if agreed to, would be advantageous, first, because it would discourage [French] privateers, and, secondly, because we have captured many of

A. Some heads for a cartel for exchange of prisoners taken at sea.

Between England and France:—

1. All prisoners taken by England (except those at Kinsale or in the Channel Islands) shall be collected at Plymouth, Southampton or Dover, and thence brought by English ships under control of the Commissioners, at the cost of France, to certain ports in France, viz., Calais, Rochfort and St. Malo or to some other port in the Bay. To these ports all the English taken at sea by the French shall be brought from all parts of that Kingdom. They must be brought by sea, or by easy journeys by land, and not chained together. Coaches or messengers shall be provided by the French King for commissioned officers and volunteers by letter, for all seamen who are sick or lame, and for all those others who may be ready to pay for them at the rate which the French King pays. The English ships going to St. Malo to pick up any French prisoners which may be at Jersey or Guernsey. Prisoners in Ireland to be sent by the Commissioners there as often as opportunity offers.

2. As soon as the English ships arrive at the French ports mentioned they shall be sent back with all the English prisoners which are there. The intendants at the said ports shall give receipts for all the French prisoners which they receive, and receive the like for the English whom they give. Both shall express their names and qualities, with a view to a final adjustment of the account. Each Government shall allow to its prisoners such allowance for subsistence as the other requires. Accounts of such allowances to be kept and cleared in French money. [Details.]

To avoid disputes the following shall be deemed to be the fixed scale of ransoms:—

An Admiral of the squadron of the French fleet shall be exchanged for the like officer in the English fleet, or shall pay ... ... ... 8,000 livres.

A Vice-Admiral shall be exchanged for the like officer in the English fleet, or shall pay ... 4,000 livres.

A Lieutenant-General or Intendant-General shall be exchanged for a Rear-Admiral of the English fleet, or pay ... ... ... ... 2,400 livres.

The list continues in a descending scale, ending with common seamen, who may be exchanged for each other or 16 livres; and boys for each other or 8 livres. All privateersmen to be rated as men of ships of 40 guns or upwards in the fleet.
Other rates are laid down for masters and men of merchant ships.

Abd. [Aberdeen.] I send you a list of the persons elected for all Scotland. We reckon the burros [boroughs] to be 34 or 35. If the D[uke] of H[amilton] could fall upon a way to secure Proves [Provost] Allardeis* to his party for the interest of the Queen and country I think it might be a fit time; for if he once engage[s] he will not be readily broke; but I fear him to be of Seafield's party. The barons [i.e. county members] are 56 or 60. I hope they will prove true to the service of the Queen and country.

There is a report here that when D. H. [the Duke of Hamilton] came to London he was informed that the Parliament of Scotland was to be adjourned to 6 April, 1703; that he had an audience and pointed out to the Queen the danger of so long an adjournment, and that she promised to recall the order for it, and gave orders to the Duke of Queensberry for it. I am told the proclamation of adjournment lay at Edger [sic] ten days before the proclamation [i.e. before it was issued] but no stop came, so it is thought that the other party is prevailing. I should be greatly obliged if you would let me know once a week how things are going.

3 Nov. Josiah Burchett to Richard Warre.

I am to inform you that several store ships and transport ships have come to St. Helen’s with three men-of-war that have arrived there from the fleet of Sir George Rooke; so that Lord Secretary Nottingham may take orders from the Queen as to what is to be done with these and others expected “suddenly” home with Sir George Rooke himself. It is unnecessary and expensive that they should remain longer at Spithead if they are not needed. The soldiers are reported very sickly and should be put ashore if the Queen’s service will allow it.

3 Nov. J. Macky to [Nottingham].

I have not exceeded your instructions in the matter of exchange of prisoners. The Commissioners for exchange of prisoners have ceased treating with Count de Mornay and gave in a scheme for a cartel of their own to the Council last Friday which, when approved, must be sent to France by some one. I may be able to do much service if I am allowed to go over. I have lived at Dover in good reputation ever since the Peace of Ryswick. I must have your approval or I am undone.

My packet-boats cost me 3,000l., and they being now laid aside by the war, I am ruined unless I have your protection.

I was never a party man, and have always done my best under the several Secretaries of State that did govern the Southern province. As director of the packet-boats at Dover I shall always try to serve you. Details.

3 Nov. Proposals for Manning the Fleet in 1703.

Five first-rate ships require in harbour 100 men each and to make up their middle complements 3,250. For eight second-rate ships the figures are 100 men each when in port and 4,400 to make up the middle complements. For eight third-rates the figures are 800 and 3,120.

The twenty-five fourth-rates in pay bear each 50 men supernumerary to the complements, and the fifteen fifth-rates each 40. Total of these two, 1,850.

The total number of men wanted to make up the middle complements of the ships of the first three rates mentioned above is 10,770.*

It is proposed to raise these in the following way:

Those borne on the ships in harbour and as supernumeraries on the fourth- and fifth-rates to be put into the ships ... ... ... ... 3,950

Twenty-five fourth-rates to be reduced to their middle complements, which, at 29 men each, is ... 725

Fifteen fifth-rates to be likewise reduced at 20 men each ... ... ... ... ... ... ... 500

Marine soldiers ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... ... 3,000

So that there will want but 805 men to man the whole fleet to their middle complements.

By this means there will be borne about 4,000 men as supernumeraries and in the ships in harbour in ordinary, which, at 45s. a man a month for wages and victuals, comes to 9,000l. a month.

1. The Judges' opinion as the proper way of dealing with those responsible for the disorders was considered by the Queen in Council.

Order, 30 October, 1702. The Judges to consider whether those persons may be brought to trial by Court-Martial on board the fleet before they arrive in England.

* i.e. 3,250+4,400+3,120.

They answer the above question in the affirmative after considering the Duke of Ormond's commission. The Queen's Serjeants, Attorney and Solicitor General and all the civilians at Doctors' Commons concur. Martial law may be exercised on the high seas before the ships return to this realm for offences committed by land forces on land beyond sea, if the expedition and authority of the General continue. The words "according to the late Act of Parliament" contained in the General's commission did not confine his jurisdiction to cases of offences mentioned in that enactment, but only applied that Act to procedure in the Courts which he assembles.

P. 3. Dated, 4 November, 1702.

Gives him power to issue rules and regulations and to punish with death or other penalties those who violate them, after trial by a Court-Martial, which he may assemble as he thinks right "pursuant to the directions of a late Act"* for punishing mutiny and desertion. Power to appoint a Provost-Marshal to use and execute the usual duties of that office. The Queen has appointed a Judge Advocate to attend the said Court-Martials and see that the proceedings are in order. If he is sick or dies the Duke may appoint another in his place. Power to replace all officers who are removed or executed by a decree of the Court. Power to order payment for the officers &c.

This concludes the documents relating to this case.

NOTTINGHAM'S LETTERS.

1. To the Prince's Council.

Her Majesty approves the proposals for a cartel at sea with France and Spain prepared by the Commissioners for Sick and Wounded and sent by Mr. Burchett. If you have no further objections, you are to deliver them to the Count de Mornay; but the Queen would have an article added to them that any agreement made by any master of any English merchant-ship for his liberty on terms in excess of those in the cartel shall be void.

2. To the Commissioners of Sick and Wounded.

To consider and report upon the letters from and to Count de Mornay, which are herewith. To consider also and report on inland places where prisoners of war may be kept more safely than at seaport towns.

1. Count de Mornay to [Nottingham].

I send a letter received from M. Cochard* concerning some French prisoners of war who have been killed and wounded for a cause which seems to me very slight. I ask justice for them and for six or seven other French prisoners who have been long kept in prison at Plymouth. They were not taken by the English but by a Flushing privateer, which put them ashore where they were seized for having, it is said, spoken objectionable words. They deny the charge, but even if it is true, I do not think that they should have so long and severe a punishment.

2. M. Cosher* to Count de Mornay.†

Since I wrote last there has been a terrible disorder in prison. The prisoners have been complaining for three weeks of having no straw on which to sleep. They complained to the Mayor, but got no relief. The prisoners, knowing that there was straw in a neighbouring house in which captives were going to be kept, should their numbers increase, resolved (ten or twelve of them) to go and sleep there, hoping to be more comfortable. They did this without disturbance for three days. On the fourth one of the servants of the jailor, seeing that they were doing so, tried to get them out with violence. He called to the guard, who came, and with their sergeant leading them, killed one prisoner and wounded seven dangerously. One was cruelly wounded six times in the body. I complained to the Mayor, who assembled all the justices, who sent an express to Portsmouth. The person most to blame is the sergeant. There were many English witnesses of the deed, but I fear we shall have no justice. The inhabitants seem very [well?] intentioned towards the prisoners. I hope this kindness will last. Details.

Documents relating to the Provisioning of Transports for Colonel Ross’ Regiment of Dragoons and others.

Memorial from the Officers “commanding the respective regiments of this embarcation.”

The regiment of dragoons of Colonel Ross and the recruits of the regiments of Lumly, Wood, Wyndham and Schonbergh were embarked on 28 May. The squadron of Lord Arran’s with the regiment of Royal Scotch Dragoons were refused to be embarqued on the same day by the Commissioners of Transport and were not embarked till the following Saturday. This occasioned the losing of a good wind to the whole convoy. The regiments first embarked suffered from heat of weather and short provisions. The Commissioners had not put sufficient hay on board, and what they put on board was bad. The provisions shipped were so bad that on several ships the cheese and beer could not be used.

It is asked that the embarkation of the whole be on one day, the allowance for each horse enlarged, the Commissioners ordered to put good food on board, and some time allowed for refreshing the horses on shore, they having suffered very much by the late embarkation.

Certificate by the undersigned Officers.

We, who command the several troops of dragoons of Colonel Ross’ regiment, certify that the provisions put on board the ships for the regiment were very bad. The hay was short and the small beer very bad. In spite of all care the provisions could scarcely be made to last six days, though we almost starved our horses. We were forced to send ashore to the Isle of Sheppey for hay.

Same by James Logan, Nathaniel Fish, Richard Allen, Joseph Hare, Henry Wright and John Bertis.

We are masters of the ships appointed to transport Colonel Ross’ regiment of dragoons and certify [corroborate generally the foregoing]

I, James Logan, master of the Benjamin, certify that of the hay put aboard me I weighed ten trusses, which weighed between 36 lb. and 40 lb. each truss. The number of trusses was 136, and these had to satisfy 68 horses for ten days. The beer was so bad that the men could not drink it. I complained to Commissioner Roope of this before we started, and he promised to send in some extra hay, but never did.

I, Nathaniel Fish, master of the Mary and Sarah, certify that of the hay put aboard me I weighed three trusses. Of these one weighed 35 lb., one 38 lb., and one 45 lb. I received 124 trusses for 62 horses for ten days. The beer was too bad to drink, and much of the cheese "insufficient."*

We, Joseph Hare, master of the Centurion, Henry Wright, master of the William and Mary, Richard Allen, master of the Olive Branch, John Bertis, master of the Exchange, certify that the hay put aboard us was taken out of the same lighters as the

Many of these Sir George Rooke has, we understand, left with Sir Cloudesley Shovell at Vigo, and probably they have goods aboard them which were taken from the galleons. My proposal (with regard to frauds committed on the coast of Kent &c.) being referred to the Admiralty by your lordship's favour, I went on Tuesday to Mr. Churchill to know what time I should attend their Board, and he answered me very short and told me "that he would not concern himself with it and that he told your lordship so before, and bid me go with my owling to the Commissioners of Customs, for it was their business and not his." I was surprised to hear such language from one in his post, especially as the Queen has so earnestly recommended it to the House of Commons to take care to prevent the exportation of wool, and [expressed] her own readiness to give all due encouragement for that purpose.

I think my proposal for this purpose is the best, and hope for the Queen's favour for it, on no recommendation except yours and that of my Lord Rochester. His lordship has promised to give me all favour, being well satisfied with my proposal and certificates.

Mr. Henry Baker, who has the management of the coasts of Kent and Sussex, though he only comes there once or twice a year, has had the face—I hear [details]—to set forth in a petition to the Queen and Council that he has stopped exportation in Kent and Sussex, and pretends to do the same throughout the Kingdom, whereon the Commissioners of Trade have ordered him to draw up heads for a bill to be presented [to] a Committee in Parliament. That your lordship may see the falsehood of these allegations I send you an account which I had from one of the transporters, who can give undeniable proof of its truth; and says this is not a quarter of what was transported by him and others in the latter part of the late reign, and all within a distance of seven miles or so.

I beg leave to let your lordship know what I have done to discover those on the coasts near me that hold correspondence with France, which, I think, will do the Queen service.

3. That a farthing in the lb. be laid on wool, which will bring many thousand pounds to the Queen, pay the officers, and defray all charges incident for preventing the exportation of wool.

4. That the wool allowed the Isles of Jersey and Guernsey be reduced to the same quantity as by the Act of 12 Charles II.

5. For preventing the exportation of wool from Ireland—that no wool be conveyed from Ireland to England without convoy to see it safely delivered in England.

Report by the Lord High Admiral.

On reference from her Majesty, I have considered the petition of the "Court of Managers for the United Trade to the East Indies." It sets forth that they have received many advices from their factories and captains of their ships that the trade in the Indian Seas has become by reason of pirates dangerous to Europeans, and to the Indians, who have, "by order of the Great Mogul, seized the petitioners' factors and servants and imprisoned them at Surat and plundered their warehouses"; and at the same time demand a large further sum to make good the losses sustained by them [the Indians] by reason of pirates.

"In consideration whereof and that the Mogul's troops are come down before Fort St. George and Fort St. David's, in order to ruin all the factories and settlements in his dominions in case they do not comply with his unreasonable demands, and that the Arabs of Muscat are of late years grown very insolent and without any reason have seized several ships belonging to this nation to a great value, and joined themselves to the Mogul's subjects in order to commit further depredations," they pray that some ships of war may be sent to India to protect their trade and suppress the pirates. The petitioners have "been discoursed thereupon," and desire two ships of 50 guns, one of 30 and a bomb vessel.

If the service of next year will admit of these vessels being sent, I think they should be sent, and that as soon as possible.

We have 275 prisoners of war, which, with the privateers, will starve the island in a short time, if a frigate be not allowed us, which may bring provisions from England. The garrison is on very hard duty to keep these prisoners, there being no house to keep them in. I am still without instructions as to how to treat the French barks which have been detained here ever since 30 April. The Court is much excited about the dispute between Priaulx and Houil [?], as well as the difference they have with Sir Edmund Andros about the signing of contracts, which must both be brought before the Council.

As Sir Charles Hedges is ill, I write on behalf of the general officers, who desire to know the Queen's pleasure in relation to Colonel Stanhope and Lieutenant-Colonel Soames, whom they summoned as witnesses in their present inquiry into the action of Sir Henry Bellasyse and Sir Charles Hara in Spain. Colonel Stanhope declines giving evidence in the matter, alleging he was only a volunteer, that he went along with Sir H. Bellasyse and lived like a friend in the house with him; and he thinks it a great hardship to have to tell anything that may have come to his knowledge, by reason of Bellasyse's kindness. Lieutenant-Colonel Soames says that he is ready to give evidence in any trial of this matter; but is of opinion that to speak at this inquiry would make him an informer, which he begs leave to avoid. NOTTINGHAM’S LETTERS.

1. To the Duke of Ormond.

The House of Lords have ordered your Grace to lay before them an account of the whole of your expedition, and have desired that the Queen’s instructions to you and to Sir George Rooke be laid before them. I told their lordships that those instructions contained many other designs besides that on Cadiz, which might probably hereafter be put in execution, and that it would not be proper that these should now be published. Their lordships then asked that those parts only which related to Cadiz should be laid before them. I let you know of this that you may be pleased to frame your account accordingly. The Queen desires you first to lay before her an account of your proceedings from the time you landed at Cadiz until you re-embarked your men, inclusive of your action at Vigo. This you must lay before the House of Lords, too, who have asked for an account of all that was done towards intercepting M. Chateau-Regnaud’s squadrons.

2. To the Commissioners for Trade and Plantations.

Queen’s command:—Her Majesty has appointed the Earl of Peterborough Governor of Jamaica. If you want any additional instructions to be given him in this capacity, beyond those already presented by you in Council, you may lay them before her Majesty.

3. To the Prince’s Council.

Queen’s command:—To give orders for carrying Brigadier Seymour’s regiment from where it shall arrive to Plymouth.

P. 4. Ibid.

The Queen desires you, after perusing the enclosed, to report on Captain Holman's case.

Encloses:— (a) The information of Benjamin Lewis, surgeon, given before the Mayor of Plymouth on 20 October, 1702, against Capt. Benjamin Holman, of the William and Mary galley, privateer, concerning his letting a Frenchman go who had with him several drafts of the English coast and paper books, some written in characters. (b) A like information by Richard Huntly, barber surgeon. (c) A letter from William Cock, Mayor of Plymouth, to Lord Secretary Nottingham, sending the aforesaid, announcing, that he had confined Holman and asking for orders. (d) An opinion of the Attorney General advising that Captain Holman be brought up to town and prosecuted if he can give no satisfactory account of the matters mentioned in the affidavits. The trial must be in the Admiralty Court (for an offence on the high seas), and there is not enough evidence to support a charge of treason. (e) A letter from the Prince's Council to Lord Secretary Nottingham, sending papers in justification of Captain Holman, and announcing that the Marshal of the Court of Admiralty would be sent to bring him up if the Secretary still thought he should be tried at an Admiralty sessions. (f) Captain Holman's letter giving an account of the matter. The person concerned was a French lad, aged 16, born of a Dutch father in Bordeaux, who had been to learn Dutch in Holland and was returning with a few books. He had no maps, and there was no suspicion of his being a spy. He makes reflections on the character and motives of the witness Lewis. His letter is attested by the officers of his ship.

Documents relating to the Case of George and Thomas Finch.

Petition of the Finches to Nottingham, shewing that:—

Petitioners have long been traders to Spain and particularly to Port St. Mary’s, where they settled a house for trade. This was managed by their partner, Mr. Edward Harding, lately residing there.

On the treaty of "Reswick," petitioners, believing that a lasting peace had been made, sent out considerable effects of English commodities to their house at Port St. Mary’s.

As soon as they were informed of the Partition Treaty and afterwards of the King of Spain’s will, your petitioners, anticipating a war, ceased to send out further goods, but gave immediate and repeated orders to their partner to send back all their goods by what way he could.

However, owing to the size of their said trade and business, there was left at Port St. Mary when the English and Dutch forces landed there (notwithstanding all diligence used by their partner) goods, debts and effects in flota to the value of about 25,000 dollars.

On 2, June 1702, by reason of the war, their partner was obliged, for safety of their goods, to place them in trust and custody of Don Juan del Camino, as appears by the instrument of which a copy is annexed.

Their partner informs them by a letter dated 2 October, 1702 (a copy whereof is also annexed), that Camino's house was plundered by the English and Dutch forces, by which means all the said goods and all the notes and obligations for their debts and effects in flota were utterly lost.

They can bring such evidence as may be desired to support these allegations.

They pray that their case may be laid before the Queen and that they may have such relief as their case deserves.

A. Deed of Assignment between Edward Harding and Don Juan del Camino.

The Assignment is as mentioned in the covering letter. It states that:—

Harding has long been a partner with the Finches and agent for his said "company" in London and has recently, in view of current affairs, tried to collect their goods, wind up their affairs and return to London to give an account.

In spite of his diligence certain goods still remain here, which are the property of his company. They are nine pots of musk (weights given), two cedar cases with sundry of his [or his principals'] books, linen and writings, two debts due from Eugenio de Paz Faxardo of Audugar, William and James White, of this city [details]; and also a bond of adventure executed by John Joribio de Cossio and Franco de Composano of this city, to be repaid at the return of the flota [details], an invoice for woollen goods, a note made by John Baptist de Sassos, and other bills signed by John Baptist de Yiera, John del Camino, George John Jacon, Michael de San Jestevean, John Antonio Moreno, Robert de la Haya and — Marion and Cornelius Everaert,* which amount in all to the value of 20,995 ps. exos. [dollars?] odd over and above the two debts.

These he puts into the hands of Mr. John del Camino, and confiding in his wisdom, reputation, fidelity and credit, constitutes him possessor of the whole and also real depositary and administrator, to the end he may receive the sums due, and sell the musks at the best price and give receipts. If the depositor dies before the end of this concern, account must be rendered to his company or their heirs or legatees without disturbance by the depositor's heirs.

And John del Camino accepts the trust reposed in him and undertakes to discharge it and acknowledge the receipt of the aforesaid goods, bills &c.

* Details given in each case.
B. Edward Harding to George and Thomas Finch.

It is a long time since I heard from you and, if you have written since, never expect they will come to hand. Details as to bills sent to London. Proceeds:—I have sold all your concerns and made over what I could not at that time recover to D.J.C. At that time I was morally assured I should be able to recover all in, but the unhappy arrival of our fleet has frustrated all my expectation and, but for my duty, I would forbear to give you the following sorrowful account.

On August 23 our fleet arrived, spreading themselves from St. Philipe towards the back-side of Cadiz, near the river of St. Peter; by which working all people supposed they would attack Cadiz that way. Upon this there was a Council of War held, but the day following they removed and came into the Bay of Bulls, landing their soldiers and train of artillery in Rota and Canvelos, which alarmed exceedingly our town of St. Lucar; for we had continually messages every day from the English camp that they would soon be with us, and it can hardly be expressed "the cries and uproars that were among us, and the hazards that some of us Englishmen underwent at that juncture, who were then retired to the College of St. George"; but instead of going to St. Lucar they bent their course to Port St. Mary's and entered the town without any opposition on 1 September, and remained in it 23 days. The Duke of Ormond then drew near the town and made about three hours' stay to see if any principal men of it would come to him; but finding that the people of all degrees forsook their habitations, he went forward "without the least intentions to plunder, it being contrary to the tenor of his declaration he spread before his entrance. But there were some principal officers in our army and the Dutch, well known for their covetousness, who contradicted the Duke's orders, encouraging their soldiers to plunder, which they performed the very day they went in, in an extreme manner, not leaving behind them anything of value. In the time they were in Port they detached some of their soldiers and mariners to Port Royal and took possession of that place, and from thence they pretended to take the Mata Gorda, that thereby they might the more easier enter Pontales, but, after nine or ten days battering before it and loosing some men, finding it too hot work, they gave their design of taking Cadiz quite over," and last week drew off and re-embarked their men, who are now safe aboard and ready to go back to England, save only seven or eight men-of-war bound (as some say) for the West Indies.

"Thus has ended the great design of our fleet and land soldiers—who have been so long time preparing—with only the carrying away (for the major part) their countrymen and allies' goods." Moreover, they have made it impossible for us to recover any of our debts standing out in the country or concerns in the Judges*; for many of the Spaniards are quite undone, and the others, if they are knavish, will have a good cloak for their pretence. I think they have done in this case too much or too little. If they had attacked Cadiz at first, as many thought they would, 'twas very feazable they might be masters of the place, and they would have humbled the Spaniards' proud spirits, and our commerce would hereafter have had from them all due respects; but in regard our fleet lost that great enterprize, I think they did too much in plundering Port St. Mary, where their countrymen and allies were more concerned than the Spaniards, and I am afraid they [the Spaniards ?] will soon charge us with more than they lost.

I am sensible some will say that the Spaniards deserved to be plundered for not coming in to the Duke and keep[ing] their habitations; but to this there were two hinderances. The first grinded very hard upon them, for upon the approach of the Duke of Ormond, the Captain-General and Correjidor proclaimed the whole town as traitors and subject to martial law if they did not follow them out of the town, which they all performed save only some few poor miserable families. The second hinderance is that "although there are many discontented people who are uneasy with the present Spanish Government, yet they thought it not prudence to be too hasty in siding with our arms until they had plainly seen our part successful by taking into their possession some strong place." Otherwise they might have been hanged when the [our] enterprize failed. The soldiers have made a very great havoc in the Scrivener's office, taking out and tearing the registers, which will bring upon the commerce a very great confusion. They did not spare any books and papers of strangers, tearing and throwing them into the street. This may be of very ill consequence when the Spaniards return to their habitations, for if some that lie about the streets unfort fall into the Correjidor's hands he may inspect into strangers' concerns. The two chests marked R. 11 and 12, with all our books and papers and all my linen and wearing apparel suffered the same fate, for having sent our man Mr. Nicholas from this place to the fleet and from thence ashore into port in order to save them, upon his entering into Don J. C.'s he found all gone save only the journal, ledger and copy-books of letters, with some odd papers, which he brought home.

'Tis reported there was no good understanding between our Admiral and the Dutch, nor their land officers and ours. I will in a very few days go hence to Lisbon, where I will wait and try to hear what has become of our scattered friends and debtors, and try to get in what they owe, in which I hope I will succeed better than I expect. However, if you think it better that I should return at once I will do so. I would not willingly be here an hour longer than I am serviceable.

* I think this the correct reading, and refers to debts in litigation; but the phrase may be "in the Indyes" [Indies].

"Our fleet has left behind them such a filthy stench among the Spaniards that a whole age will hardly blot it out." We hear that they have decided that no convent, church or altars shall value the English or Dutch, and it is thought that in a little while the English Roman Catholics will fare no better. Their disgust is so great that I believe their resolution for searching out strangers' effects will be executed. Messrs. Batt and Hopkins have been in great trouble in Seville and have been imprisoned in their houses for not showing their books and papers. Mr. Batt, for bribes, was released [details]. I thank God I escaped their hands [details]. We have various reports [details] that the [Spanish] flota has arrived from Havana at Corunna or some other port in the Bay of Biscay. Don Juan de Vizarren, Regnoso and other Indians [West Indian merchants] have lost much of their own goods and of those of other nations which were entrusted to them.

God grant you patience to bear your losses.

Pp. 2. Dated, Faro, 2 October, 1702.

P.S.—Ady, 5 October.—The above is a copy of what I wrote you via Lisborne. I have only to add that yesterday morning our whole fleet were seen off this coast "with a fair Levant."* So they may be with you before this. The Spanish flota is safe at Vigo, and some think that the sudden departure of our fleet was made with the object of surprizing the French ships that accompanied them to that port. We shall soon see what is the integrity of the Spaniards, but I doubt it much in view of the way they have been provoked.

REPORT by the LORD HIGH ADMIRAL.

I have lately received a petition from several merchants trading to Portugal in which they say that there are nine large French ships cruising on that coast, and may be a greater force (besides privateers), making rendezvous at Vigo; and asking for an enlarged convoy since their trade to Portugal has increased since they originally asked for one of four ships.

If it is thought right to strengthen the convoy as they desire, so as to make it superior to the aforesaid French squadron, there may be soon got ready six or seven 70 gun ships, and two Extracts from Letters [to ———] on the Plunder and Booty from Port St. Mary's and Vigo.

From Mr. Clutterbuck at Portsmouth, October 23.

The captain of the Flamborough refuses "modestly" to have some wine brought ashore. I see he has drawn some wine and brandy out in bottles and presume you do not mean to have such things on shore, which are of small value and only for common use. Moreover the captain says on his oath he bought the brandy of a Spaniard.

An inventory was enclosed with details of wine, vinegar and cloth.

From Sir George Parker, Portsmouth, October 24.

Repeats information in foregoing paragraph as to the Flamborough. Proceeds:—Yesterday I went aboard the Pembroke, which brought the express from Sir George Rooke. I made a rough inventory of the booty there. There was cocoa, snuff and wine. [Details.]
From Mr. Hook, Plymouth, November 17.

To-day the transport Elizabeth and Mary (Thomas Braines commander) came in with dragoons aboard her. One of our officers went aboard her at once to search for plundered goods. I send the inventory: 13 pieces of linen, 2 pieces of kentin, about 7 yards of camlet.

In the custody of Adjutant Scaife [or Scaife]:—Seven pieces of kentin, a piece of linen about 10 yards, a parcel of toys in a small red silk bag, a bag of about 30lb. of snuff, about one yard of red damask silk, one silk fur gown, an old piece of brocado silk, an old piece of white silk, two pieces of old damask silk, a piece of old black velvet, two old velvet waistcoats, a small piece of scarlet serge, about eight yards of camlet.

Other or similar details follow of goods found in the possession of Mr. Guest, Mr. Hollanworth, Mr. Bright, Captain Braines and the mate. Nearly all the booty is either cloth of some kind or cocoa, but the captain has "a picture without a frame" and "a small paper bag of china and glasses." The mate has "three little pippets" and "one image painted with gold."

Mr. Bargrave writes from Deal on November 7 that he has searched the Plymouth (Captain Kirktown) and found only 6$\text{cwt.}$ of snuff and 4$\text{cwt.}$ of cocoa.

Mr. Hugh Jones writes from Falmouth on 7 November:—I confirm my brother's letters. I have landed the goods at the hazard of my life. If I had not "been back'd with all the packet-boats' men in arms to assist [I] could not repel the fury of the Dragoons." The goods are worth about 1,500$\text{l.}$ Particulars will be sent later.

His brother's letters mention several puncheons of linen, a great many boxes of snuff of good value on the Charity (commander James Burney). He has seized it and has put waiters on board the ship, but the captain refuses to hand over the goods till he sees the Prince's order for it. It may be proper to obtain this same, but writer will see in the meantime that no embezlement be made and that the ship be stopped in harbour till the captain complies. This he will do when his brother comes back with the Prince's order.

The inventory mentions 21 timber cases of snuff, five tin cases and six barrels of same, a bundle of whalebone, five puncheons of linen, eight bags of pepper, one barrel of indigo and other details.

Mr. Manley and Mr. Hook write from Plymouth on 8 November.

They deal only with the Elizabeth and Mary and say that about 10$\text{cwt.}$ more of cocoa have been found on her.

Mr. Charles Bargrave writes from Deal on 9 November:—

The boat has been off and has brought ashore some goods, which are stored in the Custom House. As soon as possible to-morrow I will board every man-of-war and tender and first demand all the goods in the abstract sent me. Where these are refused I will take an account of the captain and ship and will then wait on the Admiral, from whom I have already obtained an order to all the commanders to deliver their plunder to me.
and assist me. After this, if the fleet do not sail, I will get a hoy or two and take out all the plunder I can. Meantime, I have put waiters on board. It is a full day's work for all of us to search one ship and our boats cannot clear one in one day.

List follows of plunder taken from the Delight frigate (Captain Robert Spelman), the Lucy tender (Captain Evans) and the Mary and Margaret tender (master, Thomas Whales).

Coarse "parragan," bags of cochineal, casks of pepper, frankincense, wool &c. [details].

The master of the Mary and Margaret denied that he had any such goods on board; but, on search, they were found.

Samuel Powell writes from Deal on 9 November.

Reports taking plunder [details] out of the Willing Mind (John Winnecott, master), and the Speedwell (John Tibbard master). Out of Lord Portmore's baggage he took 25 pieces of plate (spoons, forks &c.), a bag of dollars (said to be 400), snuff &c. All has been lodged in the Custom House under three locks.

Mr. Bargrave writes from Deal on 10 November.

Reports goods taken from the St. George transport (Captain George Purvis) and warehoused. A pipe of white wine still remains on board.

Mr. Jones writes from Falmouth on November 7, and reports various goods taken ashore which belonged to Captains Sherrard and Fitzpatrick and Major Lloyd; also wine from the Friends' Adventure (William Baldwin, master).

Sir George Parker writes from Portsmouth, 12 November.

We went yesterday aboard Sir C. Shovell to desire his assistance in securing the plunder. He showed us two orders from the Lord High Admiral, one ordering that nothing should be taken out of the men-of-war till further order; and another directing the plunder on board the men-of-war to be taken aboard five or six frigates, which should sail soon to the Downs.

We yesterday secured some plate and money, which we met coming ashore in charge of some land officers' servants.

Mr. Hooke writes from Plymouth, November 13.

The dragoons are believed to have carried ashore many of the goods mentioned in my inventory of 1 November. This could not have been done had not the Customs officers refused to take anything ashore but what was marked and numbered by Sir George Rooke. Moreover, while I was denied in this way, one of the tide surveyors to the Customs last Wednesday brought ashore from the Elizabeth and Mary all the cocoa and what else remained of the inventory I sent you up, and put them into her Majesty's storehouse. I have since seen them weighed and inventoried. My orders from you cannot be carried out unless we and the Custom House officers co-operate heartily. On Wednesday the Susanna and Oriana transports came in, and to-day the Adventure and Lawrell ketches and the Griffin pink, all from Vigo. We have taken plunder out of them. The first two are full of plunder from Vigo, and the hatches sealed up by Sir C. Shovell. I have added my seal and put two waiters aboard.

pending further directions. Account follows of the plunder landed from the Elizabeth and Mary transport.

Mr. Bargrave writes from Deal on 13 November.

I send list of goods taken by himself and Mr. Powell from the St. John tender (Charles Crickett, master)—plate, snuff, iron &c. Two Custom House waiters and [an]other for the prize [were left] on board her.

We called on board the Thomas and John (— Stephen master), and got a list of goods on board from the mate, the master being away. [Details of goods.] We put on board two Custom House waiters and one for us. We also boarded the Two Shreives transport (John Frost commander), and got an account of the plunder. [Details.] None were taken ashore. We also, on the 13th November, boarded the Benjamin transport (Philip Dumble [?] master), and took off plunder. [Details.] There was little wine left, the company having drunk of it all the way home. We also took some wine and salt out of the Honor's Adventure* storeship (Robert Bartholomew master). Other goods [details] were left aboard, the master promising to deliver them in London. The ship leaves the Downs to-day. Two Custom House waiters on board.

Details follow as to the Providence transport (Nicholas Willis commander). The mate said the master had a cocquett for all these, but I shall to-morrow shew him his mistake. I have chartered a hooker to take off plunder and will do my best to prevent embezzlement. The goods are stored under three locks.

Mr. Bargrave writes from Deal on 14 November.

He encloses an account of the goods on board the Ruby (Alexander Kenton master), dated 14 November, all which goods the master undertakes to deliver to the proper officers at the first safe harbour.

Mr. Cole writes from Cowes on 14 November.

Encloses a list of small goods taken by the prize officers from a small hoy (Walter Jones master) of Cowes, just come down from Spithead.

Mr. Jones writes from Falmouth, 12 November.

He sends a list of plunder taken at Port St. Marie's by the Charity (John Burney commander) and lodged in the prize office cellar at Falmouth on 3 November, 1702.

List follows of wool, pepper, snuff, sherry, port &c.

Sir George Parker writes from Cowes, 16 November, sending a list of goods [details given] brought out of the Thirston[?] (Thomas Broming master).

Mr. Bargrave writes from Deal on 17 November.

Rough weather has prevented me putting Mr. Hunt, of the Customs, aboard Captain Kenton's ship the Ruby. The same night she drove, in rough weather, to "Romansgate pier." There Mr. Mockford, Surveyor of Customs, seized her because she had no waiter aboard, and put her goods into the Custom House store. "This is the plagues we undergo here with unreasonable men." Captain Whitehall shewed me three letters directed to him from the Commissioners of Customs [details given], dated 17th, 20th, and 22nd October. After conflicting orders it appeared from the last letter that the Queen's intention is to prohibit the landing only of such plundered goods as are not marked and inventoried by Sir George Rooke. Those so marked to be landed and stored. I am trying to get the plunder ashore, and the surveyor has been assisting, with Mr. Warren. I can do nothing if the Customs officers receive orders which conflict with mine.

Mr. Hook, Plymouth, 15 November. Plundered goods brought ashore. Heavy weather. List enclosed.

Mr. Jones, Fowey, 16 November. Plunder brought ashore.

Mr. Newman, Dartmouth, 17 November. Sends an inventory of plunder on board the Swiftsure (Captain Wynn), which is going to Portsmouth.

Mr. Bargrave, Deal, 17 November. Plunder taken from the John pink (Captain Crickett). Account sent. Information regarding the Joseph and Thomas transport (Thomas Rogers commander) and the Two Sheriffs transport (John Frost commander). The last two have gone to London.

Same, 18 November. Rough weather. Delay of Captain Kenton in allowing goods to be landed. List of goods demanded of Captain Nicholas Willis, of the Providence transport. He disputed having some of them.

Mr. Solers, Sheerness, 19 November. Is on the watch to prevent plunder-running; but it is difficult to run it owing to the rough weather.

Sir George Parker and Mr. Goreing, Portsmouth, 21 November. Sir George Rooke never put a particular mark on any goods but merely took lists from the captains &c. of his ships. They have tried to store apart the plunder from each ship; but even those who brought it cannot always say whether it came from Port St. Marie's or Vigo. The goods are few and unlikely to pay for the cost of landing, storage &c.

Mr. Cole, Cowes, 21 November. Plate-running from the prize ships by Mr. Bills, goldsmith, of Newport, I.W. Capture and re-capture. Mr. Bills has promised that it shall be forthcoming. Hoys' loads from Spithead. List of goods brought in them.

List of goods landed out of the Mary of Portsmouth (— Seater master).

Yours of the 21st. We have no orders to meet bills drawn by Consul Broughton to meet the expenses of taking care of English seamen at Venice. I send enclosed. The privateers of Guernsey want a Prize Court there to adjudge prizes. I have no other concern in the matter than to keep out unworthy persons who apply for posts. The Lieutenant-Governor and some of the magistrates of the island should be employed; as was done in the first Dutch war in King Charles II's time. Captain Edwards of the Bedford galley has been ordered to cruise off Guernsey and Jersey to protect the trade of those islands; but I think [details] that he will spend most of his time in looking after French prizes and that the island will have little or no help from him.
The Queen's answers to the addresses of the Lords and Commons gives an extraordinary instance of her good judgment in "so nice an affair." It seems as if she wishes to make her people happy in spite of their troubles [?].

We have removed the Count de Mornay and all the other prisoners at Scotland Yard to the Tower. The Count, having seen the accounts of the English merchants detained at Bayonne,* has undertaken to write to M. de Pontchartrain again about them. On the question of the treatment of French prisoners, their letters to him shew that their chief grievance is insufficient liberty to go out; but some who, being sick, were put into town quarters, have escaped; and those who were surgeons and permitted to visit them have done the same. Nevertheless we have written to Plymouth for an account of the whole.

We again regret the escape of Captain de Gratton†. We have allowed our officer to search further for him.

24 Nov. Doctors’ Commons. Jeffrey Glasier to [Same ?].

I have yours with enclosures and have entered a criminal prosecution against Captain Holman and sent a warrant to arrest him by last Saturday’s post to Plymouth. I will proceed with vigour and will write to the witnesses by this post; and when the warrant is executed and returned shall proceed further.

24 Nov. Whitehall. Nottingham to the Commissioners of Sick and Wounded.

The Queen approves your having quartered the sick men as you have done.

As Captain Graton† has escaped, the Queen thinks that Count de Mornay and the other prisoners in Scotland Yard should be sent to the Tower. You are to take care of this.

M. de Pontchartrain has written to the Count de Mornay that the English merchants at Bayonne shall be released when the cartel is made. Their case has nothing to do with the cartel, and, pursuant to the Treaty of Ryswick they should be discharged, since they came into France some days before the declaration.

of war and had also passports from the Spanish Governor. You will explain to Count de Mornay that the Queen gave at first a general order for discharging all French merchants who were here before the war, and, since that, has given special orders on any application. We expect that English merchants will receive a like treatment in France. Desire Count de Mornay to write to France accordingly.

You should hear what Count de Mornay has to say about the ill-treatment of French prisoners at Plymouth: and give redress where there is a case for it. Let him know I have directed this.

Also note that the merchants at Bayonne left Bilboa [Bilbao] on 23 June, 1702, and arrived at Bayonne 34 June.

The declaration of war bears date at Bilboa 24 June and in France. 3 July RENEWED COMMISSION FOR BUILDING ST. PAUL'S.

RECITES the commissions of King Charles II (12 November, 1673), James II (22 January, 1689) and William and Mary (3 June, 1692), and says that since those commissions issued considerable progress has been made in the said building.

PROCEEDS:—We appoint you Commissioners to carry on, finish and adorn the said church. You or any six of you (of whom the Bishop of London or Dean of St. Paul's shall always be one) shall carry on the work in such way and by such rules as you think proper, and may employ artists and workmen therefor, and minister to them such oaths for the performance of their several duties as you think reasonable and pay them as you think right. You shall consider and issue regulations for keeping the materials and the money supplied for the work, and preventing the issue of such money for any use other than the public use intended. You shall take steps to have books and accounts properly kept and audited [details] and may appoint subcommittees (of yourselves and others) to manage the work and give them what powers you think fit, and revoke their appointments or revive them, or replace them as you think conducive to the service; and shall take all necessary steps to finish the work and make ordinances for its maintenance and protection.
Such ordinances to be presented to us for approval under our signature, or the Great Seal, or otherwise, "that so they may be put in due execution accordingly."

Lest there be any obstruction to finishing a work which is well advanced, we authorise you, the Bishop of London, and you, the present Dean and Residentiaries of St. Paul's and your successors, to collect subscriptions for the purpose, and to appoint persons to assist in collecting subscriptions, and to keep registers, as formerly, of such subscriptions. All money so raised, or paid in under the late Act of Parliament* by an imposition on coals, which is issued (according to that Act) by warrant signed and sealed by the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Bishop of London and the Lord Mayor of London, for the time being, or any two of them for the use of the cathedral, shall be paid to such person as any six of you (of whom the Bishop of London or the Dean of St. Paul's, for the time being, shall always be one) shall appoint.

To help in paying so vast an expense, and to insure the discovery of all bequests made and all subscriptions given for the work, we authorise you or any six or more of you (of whom &c. as before) to inquire by the oaths of lawful men and by examination of witnesses on oath (whom you may swear, whether as jurymen or witnesses), or without oath, to inquire in regard to all such sums how they have been spent and what yet remains in hand; and also whether any materials or utensils collected for building of the cathedral have been disposed or carried away; and to call for and swear witnesses and call for the production of registers and accounts. For your ease and better expedition in carrying out part of your commission, we command all surveyors, actuaries, registers, officers &c. whom you of the Commission ask for to be attendant on and assisting you in the execution of your duties.

All sheriffs, justices, constables, bailiffs and all other our subjects, on any warrant or precept issued from you, shall return jurors, and serve orders and summonses and in all things aid you in the effectual execution of your Commission. We further authorise any six of you to take steps [details] for getting in any sums payable for the building, but not yet paid in.

This Commission shall continue in force and you (or any &c. as before) shall continue to execute it although the same be not

S.P. Dom., Anne 1, 103.

The Commissioners of Sick and Wounded to Nottingham.

We have removed the prisoners to the Tower as directed. As Count de Mornay complains much of gout, we sent a messenger to the Tower to communicate his orders as to their going there, and see that the Count might be carried directly to his lodgings. The commanding officer replied that he did not think himself authorised to receive the prisoners without the Queen's command. As we have been ordered by the Lord High Admiral to send to the Tower all the French and Spanish officers lately brought from Vigo, we presume to ask that the Queen be moved to send orders to the Tower for their reception.

The Count was ill in bed last night. Shall we move the rest of the prisoners without him or continue them where they are until we can move all together?

Count de Mornay to [the Duke of Ormond].

I send a memorandum as desired. Pray excuse me the journey in my present state and accompanied by eight persons who are nearly all at my expense. Pray send the orders to-day. I am your grateful servant &c.

Points which I wish the Duke of Ormond to present in my favour.

I had nothing to do with the Sieur Graton's escape. He was not of my ship and was taken two months before me. Neither I nor my crew have broken any rules laid down for us. I should not be punished for Graton's escape.

If my word is trusted I will give it for all those who are with me. I only ask to be told what is desired of me in my captivity.

If my word is not trusted, I will give security.

If I am put in the Tower I hope that those who have been with me (and who I have supported and who have no other means of support) may be provided for.

If anything has been maliciously said against me I can prove that I have always behaved as I should have done since I came here.

Pp. 1 3/4, in French. Ibid, 66A.

Same to [Nottingham ?].

I am too ill to go to see you and beg you to send some one by whom I can send a message to you before I go to the Tower; where I am to go this afternoon.

Proctors, interpreters and notaries were paid in all 688l. 15s. 6d.

Report by Thomas Morice and others on Mr. Whitaker’s accounts.

On 10 September last, in answer to many precepts and letters, Mr. Whitaker brought in his accounts of money received and paid as Solicitor &c. [see title] for the purpose of our examination pursuant to the Act. The accounts were nearly 1,700 pages, accompanied by parcels of papers relating thereto. He said he had alterations to make in them and did not attest them till 24 September.

In addition to their large volume there were other reasons which made it difficult for us to examine the accounts. The times and causes of payment, and the vouchers, were not placed in order and did not agree with the times and sums in his former accounts delivered to Parliament. The receipts produced did not agree with the sums charged.

We have, however, gone through it as carefully as we could, and lay a state thereof, with our observations, before your lordships.

General and detailed criticism of the accounts follows, shewing that Whitaker has charged extravagantly for his services.

NOTTINGHAM’S LETTERS.

1. To the Director of the packet-boat at Falmouth.
   You must not let the packet-boat for Lisbon sail with yesterday’s mail till I send you leave.

2. To the Commissioners of Sick and Wounded.
   Queen’s command:—To cause MM. d’Aligre, Gallissonnière and Soreli, the Spanish admiral taken at Vigo and the Count de Mornay (as soon as his health will permit) to be conducted to Oxford, and leave them there as prisoners of war on parole not to go out of Oxford and not to write or transmit any matter to France or Spain unless it is first sent to a Secretary of State. They must, to avoid mistakes, sign a paper promising this upon honour.
   The rest of the prisoners taken at Vigo must be kept in safety in some inland town where some of the Queen’s forces are. As to this you must inquire of Mr. Blathwayt, who will tell you of a proper place. He must have orders to have a proper guard set.

25 Nov. Account of the PROCEEDINGS of the COMMISSIONERS appointed by Act of Parliament to take, examine and determine the DEBTS due to the ARMY &c.

We have done our best to state the accounts of the regiments &c. under command of the Queen’s natural-born subjects. We have adjusted the accounts of 54 regiments, two independent companies and 20 garrisons. A list of these, and of others brought in too late to be stated, and of others not yet brought in (in spite of all notice given), we present in paper No. 1* to your lordships.†

We have taken care to state the items of debt for clothing, poundage &c. [details]. Very few regiments have complied with the Act of Parliament by naming a person to whom we might certify the debt to the regiment to be payable in order to his receiving debentures for the same.

* For greater accuracy we have taken respites and allowances [details] into account in the case of each regiment. Details appear in papers 2* and 3.*

We have stated an account of the interest allowed by the Act on the debt for the transport service in 1693 and have issued out debentures for the same to those who appear for them.

We find the sum due to Dutch and other foreign transports is 22,850l. odd. 4,770 gilders are placed in the account as paid

* These documents have not been preserved.
† Probably the Privy Council.
1702.

In part of interest and 7,486l. odd more is asked as interest on this at 6 per cent. for six years to March 31, 1696. No agreement was made for such interest, and we think none should be paid, and that what has been paid should be accounted as payment of principal.

The accounts of the regiments on the Irish establishment were laid before us by the Paymaster of the forces there, and we find that the army was paid according to the English establishment, but that by a warrant from "her late Majesty" to General Ginckle, dated 12 February, 1699, a lower rate of pay was directed. This warrant was never superseded and would [if applied in estimating the debt] reduce it by 30,000l. This being so, we did dot pass the said accounts or make out certificates for them till we should receive directions from Parliament. We send a copy of her Majesty's warrant in paper No. 4.*

We have not been able to deal satisfactorily with the accounts of the regiment lately commanded by Colonel John Gibson. In the case of Captain Griffin May's company erasures and additions appear on which we have not received proper satisfaction. [Details.]

We have been so busy with our first duty—that of stating arrears—that we have not been able to give much time to the accounts of the Commissioners of Prizes.

The accounts are so complicated, and the several Commissioners profess to be so little able to answer our questions, that we fear it will take a very long time to make an account which will comply with the Act. Details as to the ships taken, their tackle &c. are often wholly lacking, "and in some no mention of the time when, place where, or persons to whom sold, [so] that no estimate can be made of the condition, burthen, nor consequently of the value of the said ships or goods, or any discovery of embezzlements or frauds in the sales, many of which were not public." Several ships, being of the same name as others, may, for want of the distinctions mentioned above, pass without coming into account at all.

The arrears to the army and other services now and formerly certified and laid before your lordships are as follows:

As Sir David Dalrymple and one of the Judges of the Sessions are now in town, we think it would be a good time to move in the matter. Under the late King's direction we met the Secretaries of State of Scotland with Mr. Hill and came to "arguments" which we hoped would result in payment; but it is still delayed.

Having received the Queen’s command to lay an account of the proceedings of the general officers in relation to the charge against Sir Charles Hara and Sir Henry Belasyse before the Committee of Council, I applied to the Secretary of War for the names of the general officers. I got a list on the 17th and requested those in town to be at the Horse Guards next morning, when I read them the Order in Council, by virtue of which I had given them notice to attend. They said that misdemeanours were, in it, alleged to be charged against the two officers, but as no charge appeared to them, they directed me to inform you of this, that you might receive the Queen’s further commands, and adjourned to the 23rd. On the 23rd the Secretary at War sent me a letter, in answer to what had been wrote to you, saying that the charge against these two officers was to be received by inquiry from the Duke of Ormond and Sir George Rooke. On hearing this letter the general officers directed copies of it to be sent to Ormond and Rooke, with notice of their intention to meet on the 25th and be ready to receive any charge exhibited against the gentlemen after whose behaviour at Port St. Marie’s inquiry was made. His Grace attended before the meeting broke up and was acquainted with what had been ordered. In the letters to Sir George Rooke, it was added—that he would let the general officers know of what plunder had been put aboard the fleet when off Cadiz, to whom it appeared to belong by the directions put upon it, and by whom put on board. At the meeting a petition of Sir Charles Hara to the Prince was also read, in which he prayed that the charge against him of his breaking his arrest and his suspension thereupon might be examined by the general officers. The general officers, having the Queen’s command to examine into the matter, directed Sir Charles’s presence at their meeting on the 25th.

On the 25th Sir George Rooke laid before the officers an account of the plunder for which he had been asked, and said he had nothing to add in relation to the charges. The Duke sent word that he could not be present on the 25th, but would be present on the 27th, so the officers adjourned till that day and ordered Sir C. Hara to attend again then. The Duke attended on the 27th and showed orders from her Majesty, which he had received at sea, requiring him strictly to examine the charges made against Sir Charles Hara and Sir Henry Belasyse by Count de Wratislau, the Emperor's envoy, and to break or suspend them as he should see cause. The Duke delivered in this order and the letter, or a copy of it, from the Count to you of 20 September (to which the Queen's order referred), complaining of the disorders committed by Sir Henry Belasyse and Sir C. Hara at the taking of Port St. Marie's, which he said he was informed of by several letters he had the night before from the fleet. The general officers thereupon directed a letter should be sent to the Count de Wratislau to desire he would let them know the names of the persons who had made the charges, that they might be summoned, and, if he pleased, would send them the letters. The Duke of Ormond named four officers who, he thought, should be summoned; and all the field officers in town of the regiments, and captains of the Guards that had been at Cadiz, were notified to attend the next meeting of the general officers, which was fixed for December 3rd, in the hope that on that day the general officers from Holland would be present and help in the inquiry, as some of those who had been in the expedition to Cadiz desired to withdraw, not wishing to be inquirers into a matter in which their names might be mentioned as persons concerned. Sir Charles Hara was called in and delivered a paper* in answer to the charge of breaking arrest, and said the ship in which he was [under arrest] was ordered into Portsmouth harbour, as he was told by the captain before he went on shore. The Duke of Ormond related how he had put Sir Charles under arrest, and, after debate, four of the officers were of opinion that he had not broken his arrest and four that he had, and gave their reasons in a paper enclosed.†

Sir Henry Belasyse's petition that the general officers should hear and determine the charge against him of breaking his arrest, and the Queen's pleasure that they should hear it, were received; and Sir Henry Belasyse was called in. Sir Henry came in and said that he believed that the Duke had not intended to arrest him, but only to prevent his being present at a Council of War which was to be held "on board Sir George Rooke" the day before the attempt upon Vigo; and that, if the Duke had arrested him, he had not broken his arrest, for reasons given in a paper‡ which he put in. After debate the general officers decided that Sir Henry had been arrested and had broken his arrest, and adjourned to 3 December.

A. Reasons offered by Sir Charles Hara shewing that he did not intend to break his arrest, and, as he conceives, has not done so.

1. It has always been the custom for officers under arrest to march with their corps in spite of their arrest, without asking permission to do so. With submission, I conceive that if I had been confined at Port St. Marie's I might have embarked and marched with the army to any place without prejudice to my arrest.

† See enclosure B.
‡ See enclosure C.

2. I had no ship assigned for my arrest, nor was I in custody. The captain of the ship did not speak of it.

3. The fleet, coming to England, divided. The ship I was in went into Portsmouth and the Duke of Ormond into the Downs; so that I could not get leave from him to land. I did not know where his Grace was or what had become of him till I came to London.

4. On arriving at Portsmouth I acquainted the Judge Advocate and the Secretary to the Generalissimo of the Army with it; and when I came to town set forth in my petition to his Royal Highness the Prince of Denmark that I was in arrest, and did not stir out of my house till I received an order of suspension for having broke it.

5. The crime in breach of arrest is contempt of authority: and of this I have not been guilty. I acted on necessity.

Mr. Malchor, Mr. Waite and Mr. Bowly and Mr. Chamberlain (English merchants that came lately from Sevill and Cadiz) informed me. He and his relations were always very civil to them in Spain, and they ask that he may have the liberty of this City on his parole and not be sent with the French officers out of town. They believe that this would be very well taken in that part of Spain, where, in time of peace, many English reside and where we trade much, if this distinction were made between him and the French. As there are no other Spaniards here this will be no prejudice to her Majesty’s service, and may make them more civil to the English in those parts.

JOSIAH BURCHETT to RICHARD WARRE.

Some time since, I think, a petition from the Virginia merchants of London was put into Lord Secretary Nottingham’s hands, in which they asked that the Queen would fix a time for the whole trade to leave England and return. The Bristol and Liverpool merchants have sent in objections to this, which have been referred to his Royal Highness; but the London petition has not been sent back. Pray send it so that his Royal Highness may consider all together.

The PRINCE’S COUNCIL to NOTTINGHAM.

In answer to your request as to what ships could be depended on for next year’s service, and when they may be ready, we send a report, for which we asked, from the Navy Board. We also send our opinion as to convoy ships and cruisers for next year.

A. The Navy Board to Josiah Burchett.

In obedience to his Royal Highness’s commands we looked over the list sent him on August 25 of the ships supposed to be in a condition to be made ready for next year’s service at sea. We at present suspect only these (out of the list):—

3* Content,
4 Advice,
,, Crown,
,, Dragon,

4 Plymouth,
5 Charles galley,
6 Messenger advice boat.

* The meaning of these numbers is not clear; perhaps it refers to the rating of the vessels.
Some of these, we hope, may be fitted for next year. The Tartar, Postilion and Rochester prizes have been added to the Navy since that list. It is hoped all or most of the following new ships may be launched and got ready by May next or thereabouts.

Fourth-rates:—
One of 60 guns and one of 50 at Deptford. One of 50 at Mr. Popely's yard; same at Mr. Taylor's and Mr. Swallow's—in all five.

Fifth-rates:—
One of 40 guns at Woolwich; same at Mr. Wells' yard, Mr. Burchet's, and at Ipswich—in all four.

Sixth-rate:—
One of 24 guns at Chatham.

Some or all of the French prizes, also, may be fitted for next year.

We cannot speak with certainty of the time at which the fleet may be ready, especially seeing how late in the year and in what bad condition they came back [this autumn]. The East Country ships, too, that are to bring stores necessary for the service, are not yet arrived, and many of the men-of-war have not yet come up to the yards to be surveyed. Many are still at sea, and wind and weather, on which such works depend, are very variable. We have, however, ordered the officers of the yards to survey each ship as she comes in and report in what order they should be taken in hand and in what time finished. As soon as these reports reach us they shall be laid before his Royal Highness. We shall do all we can and shall, as his Royal Highness orders, take the smallest ships and repairs first; and think that we can do the work so that the service will not want for ships if other matters keep pace with the fitting of them.

B. Convoys and cruisers proposed for next year provided that other services will admit of it.

This is a much larger number than was allotted in the last war, especially in the case of Virginia and the East Indies [sic]. If the service requires the body of the fleet to be abroad next year, and if these vessels are all allotted as above, it is feared that the channel and coasts may be much exposed to the insults of the enemy, before such of the said ships as are at home can be concentrated for defense. On this calculation there will remain for the body of the fleet five 1st rate ships, eight 2nd, forty-two 3rd, sixty-two 4th, thirty-three 5th, and seventeen 6th—total, 167: and there will be 110 convoys, cruisers and "remains" [details] numbering in all 57. Perhaps six further vessels may be repaired in time.

1702. 3 Dec. Note on the Case of the Tithes of Poole Myvod &c. in Co. Montgomery.

In February, 1689[90], the Marquis of Powis was outlawed for high treason.

In September, 1691, a commission issued under the Great Seal of England to enquire of and seize the Marquis's estate; and thereby the Marquis was found possessed of the tithes in question (amongst other lands) on the day of the outlawry in question; and thereupon the tithes were seized into the King's hands.

On the return of that seizure into the Exchequer the Duke of Beaufort and others plead in discharge thereof a lease of 21 years made in 1688 to them by the Marquis of Powis and Lord Montgomery for the payment of debts.

On a trial at bar in the Exchequer Court the said lease was found fraudulent and judgment was entered for his late Majesty and, on that verdict, his Majesty was put into actual possession of the lands and tithes.

The late King, by letters patents under the Great Seal granted to the Bishop of Coventry and Lichfield (now Bishop of Worcester) and to the now Bishop of St. Asaph the said tithes as long as they should remain in the hands of the Crown, in trust for the increase of several small vicarages in the diocese of St. Asaph.

In 1698 Mr. Robert Dalton (as trustee for Lord Montgomery) pleads his title to the tithes after this manner, vizt.:

---That on 28 September, 1685, the Dean and Chapter at Christchurch, Oxford, granted the tithes to the Marquis of Powis and his heirs, for the lives of Lord Montgomery, Lady Mary his wife, and Lord Castlemaine; that on 10 November, 1685, the Marquis of Powis made a lease of the tithes to Lord Thomas Howard, deceased, and the said Mr. Dalton for 99 years if the three lives should so long endure, in [trust]* for the benefit of Lord Montgomery, during his life for his maintenance, and after his decease for the benefit of Lady Montgomery for life and after to the use of the Marquis of Powis, his executors, administrators and assigns. Notwithstanding such lease, the Marquis of Powis continued in possession of the tithes and received them constantly from them till the time of his attainder and outlawry in 1689, and that then the receipts to the tenants were given in the name of Lord Montgomery.

However, the Attorney General thinks it not safe for the Bishop of Worcester to try the validity of the Marquis of Powis' lease of 1685 as to the fraud thereof; for though there is no doubt but that the lease was made by the Marquis of Powis on purpose to set up when there should be occasion, and kept by him till his outlawry in 1689, yet that does not make it fraudulent against the Crown.

That the interest of the Lord Montgomery in these tithes is only a chattel, being but for 99 years for the use and benefit of himself &c. [details], and therefore by law is forfeited to the Crown.

For that in May, 1696, Lord Montgomery was indicted for high treason in London and, not appearing, was in due form proceeded against; so that on 8 July, 1696, a writ of exigent was awarded against him on that indictment returnable in the Sessions after Michaelmas Term following; but, the Lord Montgomery rendering himself at the return of the writ, nothing further was done thereon. That Lord Montgomery, by standing out and being put into the exigent, forfeits his goods and chattels and, amongst them, his interest in the tithes, this being a chattel.

The general officers met again to-day to receive Count Wratislau's answer.*

They are very much surprised at it, and direct that a copy may be sent you to shew her Majesty, they finding that they can expect nothing more from that Envoy to substantiate the charge first made by him.

They think that, as they have only directions to inquire into the conduct of Belasyse and Hara at Port St. Marie's, their powers should be enlarged to enable them to examine the conduct of these officers from the time of the landing by Rotta [Rota] to their re-embarkation if her Majesty approves.

A. Sir George Rooke to Nottingham.

Sir Henry Belasyse and Sir C. Hara came home on the St. George, which was ordered into Portsmouth; so that unless the Duke of Ormond confined as well as suspended them I suppose they are in town long ere this.

B. Sir Edward Northey (Attorney General) to Same.

cc. Order in Council and opinion of the Judges.

At St. James, 30 October. Present—The Queen in Council.

On reading the opinion of the Judges of the Courts at Westminster about the most proper way of proceeding against and punishing persons found guilty of the disorders at Port St. Marie's contrary to the Queen's declaration and the assurances given by the Duke of Ormond to the inhabitants, it is further ordered:—

That the Judges again meet and consider whether persons accused of such disorders may not be brought to trial by a Court-Martial in the fleet at sea before their arrival in this realm.

4 Dec. Royal Warrant to the Chief Governor of Ireland.

By letter dated 17 August, 1700, King William III appointed the Chief Governor of Ireland for the time being and several other persons trustees for "erecting, establishing and carrying on" a linen manufacture in Ireland and for discharging several trusts reposed in them by the said letters. He also granted to them 800l. a year to be paid quarterly for ten years, which was to be used to pay 8 % on 10,000l. advanced by Lewis Crommelin or by his procurement. No part of the said 10,000l. has yet been paid, but, by Crommelin or his procurement, several plain looms have, with the approval of the trustees, been erected in Ireland for making linen. These are valued at 30l. each. Certain "other estilles called estilles for making fine linen in imitation of that of France and Holland" have also been put up by him, etc., and each such estille is valued at 50l. The letters of King William III are void by his death and, in order to promote the linen manufacture, we are willing to accept the looms and estilles if now or hereafter erected with the consent of the trustees aforesaid, at 30l. and 50l.
respectively, and to pay interest thereon at 8 %, as if he who put up the looms had advanced its equivalent in money.

Cause letters to pass &c. granting to the Chief Governor of Ireland, the Primate, Chancellor, Archbishop of Dublin, the three Chief Judges of the Queen's Bench, Exchequer and Common Pleas—all for the time being.—the Earl of Mount Alexander, General Thomas Erle, Francis Gwynn, Esq., Thomas Coote, Esq., the Attorney General, pro tem., St. George [Ashe], Bishop of Clogher, Thomas Keightley, Esq., James Hamilton of Donolough, Esq.,
Sir Thomas Southwell, Bt., Robert Rochford, Esq., Allan Brodrick, Esq., Sir William Robinson, Kt., John Lovett and William Fownes, Esq., the 800l. a year granted to the trustees mentioned above on the trusts mentioned in the earlier grant, —excepting only that they may and shall pay interest thereout at 8 % a year on the looms and estilles now or hereafter to be erected, taking the loom and estille at the value mentioned above or at such lower rate as the trustees may agree upon, and allowing further that any part of this sum of 800l. may, on application by the trustees to the Chief Governor, be expended on salaries to 5 Dec. John Jacob to _______.

Dinan.

I am a prisoner here. Yesterday the Commissary of St. Malo came here and examined a resident of New England what quantity of guns and soldiers were there and likewise sent another master of a New England ship to St. Malo, as I suppose, to be examined there separately.

6 Dec. The Navy Board to the Queen.

In obedience &c. . . . we yesterday went aboard the galleon which was lately taken at Vigo and is now lying at Woolwich, where we found the hatches fast spiked down and sealed with several seals, which yet remained unbroken.
The Captain said the hatches had never been opened since the ship was taken at Vigo. There were two open scuttles going down to the bread and boatswain’s store rooms, and these have been open all the time. There is at present nothing in these but bread, oil, tallow, some other bo’sun’s stores and wood. We sealed these down and gave orders for unloading the ship as soon as possible. We suggest that to prevent embezzlement, some of your Majesty’s sea-officers and custom and prize officers daily attend the unloading of the ship, and the opening of all the goods when they are taken into warehouses, and that rewards be offered, by notice in the Gazette, to those who discover embezzlements.

1. To the Commissioners of Sick and Wounded.

Queen's command:—To have MM. Coyeux, de Camilly, de Pimont, de la Groa and de St. Free taken to Oxford as prisoners of war. Conditions [as above, p. 317, q.v.]. Her Majesty would have you permit M. La Gallissonniere and M. Begon, his brother-in-law, to remain in London till they have recovered their health and then sent to Oxford on the same conditions.

On this occasion recommend the English merchants at Bayonne to Count de Mornay, or some of these gentlemen, that they may be allowed to come home without ransom, having suffered so long a confinement contrary to the Peace of Ryswick. The gentlemen mentioned in this and my letter of November 25 may take servants, for whom they will be responsible.

MEMORANDUM by the SOCIETY of APOTHECARIES, LONDON, with regard to SUPPLY of the NAVY and ARMY with MEDICINES.

"The trade of the apothecary has always been distinct from the practice of the physician, the one consisting in prescribing and the other in making, compounding and vending of medicines."

"The apothecaries of the City of London, as incorporated, have always made a considerable part of that great body, and, as such, are capable and, as in duty bound, willing on any exigency to furnish the Royal Navy or Armies with necessary medicines out of their present stock." Some members of that Society have always been employed in, and contracted for, that service, and particularly during all the time of the late war.

"For the better performing of that service the Master and Wardens of that Society, ever since they were requested so to do, have, with the greatest care and fidelity, viewed the dispensing and mixing the several medicines prepared by their members for the Army and appraised the same at reasonable rates, respect being had to the goodness, and, since that time, are bold to say that there have been few or no just complaints.

... Of late a few physicians, without the consent or approbation of the most eminent and best practised of the College, have, against law, set up a shop for making of medicines, which they are pleased to call the Dispensary, at first under pretence of charity, but now openly for private gain.

... The apothecaries in the late Taxation paid for at least 15,000l. stock, and the said shop or dispensary but after the rate of 100l. or at most 200l., and so can hardly be supposed capable to furnish the medicines requisite for this expedition without buying of the Apothecaries; and consequently not only a double profit be allowed by her Majesty, but this also takes away the most specious pretence of these physicians as to their care in the several preparations, which, notwithstanding all their boasts, they are even in their Dispensary beholden for to an apothecary of that Society."

The preferring of these few physicians who act for private gain in a business outside their own sphere will "lay an imputation upon the whole Society of Apothecaries, as not able or not honest enough to serve her Majesty; and of which they must expect presently to hear in all the publict papers."
1702.

It is therefore humbly hoped that this business may proceed in its ancient channel and such apothecaries be chosen for this service as shall be able and willing to undertake and perform the same with all expedition. The Master and Warden hereby undertake to see the same performed with all fidelity and care, of which the Physicians, if they please, may be witnesses.

9 Dec. Sick and Wounded Office.

The Commissioners of Sick and Wounded to Nottingham.

Under your lordship's orders we spoke with the French officers brought from Vigo, and shewed them the papers, prepared under same, for their obliging themselves to remain prisoners at war. They all desired their words of honour might be taken, "which they say is the only practice in such cases all over Europe and esteemed as firm an obligation as any writing whatever," but that if your lordship insisted on it, they would sign the papers. They desired leave to stay in town till Wednesday, several of them being not very well, and needing clothes &c. for their journey. They left us a list of their names, placed according to their qualities, and ask that those now ordered to be kept at Farnham under restraint, who are of equal condition with those who are to be on parole at Oxford, may be sent to Oxford also. Count de Mornay begs this for those who are in town with him, and depend upon him.

We spoke with them about the English merchants at Bayonne and they promise to write effectually to France for their enlargement.

[9 Dec.] Monsieur D'Aligre to [Same].

We have just come from the Commissioners' office, and they desired us to sign "l'engagement de nos paroles." Whilst not refusing to sign, we represent that to refuse to trust our verbal paroles is not to treat us as honest men. Having said this, we shall do what we are ordered. There is a great difference between Graton and us. We should be very pleased to stay where we are; but if we must go to "Auxfort" please give orders that we may be kept together. We commend our sick to you, and ask for time for the others to conclude their purchases.

Sir Cloudesley Shovell to Same.

In answer to your lordship's requiring a strict account of the plunder and prize goods taken at Port St. Mary's or Vigo—
I can only give an account of the goods taken out of the galleon made prize by the Mary and out of the Vigo prize (which were both aground, and the first could not be got off at all, nor the second till her cargo was taken out of her), and of the goods saved by Captain Baker out of the galleon that was lost coming out of the islands of Bayonne. As all my accounts, books and papers are on board the Shrewsbury in order to be brought round, I am not able to give your lordship a particular account thereof till she arrives, [she] being sailed out of the Downs for the Nore, where I have sent a messenger to wait for them. So soon as they come to my hands I shall transmit a faithful and particular account thereof to you; and "I do assure your lordship upon honour that I neither meddled with any of the plunder myself nor suffered any other person to embezzle the same, but when I was at Spithead I gave strict orders to the Captains of her Majesty's ships, and to the masters of the transports, store ships and tenders, to put all the gold, silver and other rich goods and plunder on board Rear-Admiral Graydon or such other ship or vessel as he should direct." The Rear-Admiral was then bound for the river and I must refer you to him for details as to the ships on which the effects were placed, &c.

One of the points in Count de Pontchartrain's last letter about the propositions for a cartel is a demand for the release of some French ships which have been detained in English ports since before the declaration of war, and are still so detained. They are—

The Gabriel Sebastien of Lezardrieux, near Brehat, 50 tons, Yves Heloury master.

The merchants of Dieppe desire release of the Nicolas, which went to Grenézé [Guernsey] at the beginning of last May. The master asked the Governor for leave to sell his cargo, which being given in writing and the ship ready to discharge under the forts, an English vessel the Oxford came in and took her to England, where she was declared good prize. M. de Pontchartrain says you can verify the facts by reference to the Governor, and that if they are as stated, the ship should be released pursuant to the provisions of the Treaty of Ryswick, and that the King desires me to ask for the necessary orders for her release. Pray let me know how to answer.

16 Dec. SIR HENRY BELASYSE* to NOTTINGHAM.

Sends a memorial and petition and begs they may be laid before the Queen in Council to-morrow.

Four lines. (Hol.) Add. S.P. Dom., Military 3, 6. Enclosing:—

A. Petition of Belasyse to the Queen, shewing that:

Petitioner has received, by direction of the general officers, a paper charging him with several goods as shipped by his order and for his use at Port St. Marie's in Spain. The particulars thereof are extracted from amongst many others out of an account delivered in by the Admiral of the several parcels and persons in whose names the plunder of the said town was supposed to be shipped.

Your Majesty having declared in Parliament that you had given orders for the strictest examination of this matter, your petitioner is certain that all persons and orders given will be investigated and not only those wherein your petitioner's name is mentioned.

As petitioner's defence will appear more full and clear by the said general examination he prays that he may not for want thereof be deprived of those necessary helps for his defence.

P. 3. Copy. Endd. Ibid, 6A.

B. Memorial of the Same to Nottingham.

Your lordship having asked for a fuller explanation of Sir Henry Belasyse's petition,

He says that if all the orders given out by the General both to the army and to particular persons at La Rota and Port St. Mary's be laid together before her Majesty, and all the transactions of the whole affair fully represented to her, Sir Henry Belasyse's actions might very well be justified; whereas if he is charged with some particulars only, without what may appear from the circumstances of the whole affair, it will be more difficult for him to justify himself to the full satisfaction of her Majesty.

As the goods alleged to have been shipped by his order and for his use are extracted out of an account delivered in by the Admiral of the goods supposed to be shipped by the orders and for the use of many other persons, he thinks that if the whole were laid before her Majesty it would tend much to his justification.

Prays that all the above-named orders and particulars may be laid before the Queen.

* This name, which is spelt in so many different ways, is here spelt thus by its owner.

16 Dec.
Admiralty Office.

The Prince's Council to Nottingham.

Yours of the 12th. We were ordered to consider a proposal made to the Queen for paying the six frigates that attend on the coast of Ireland out of the revenue of that kingdom, that they may be eased of the inconvenience of sending money to Jamaica to pay the forces there that are on the Irish establishment. This course would keep the money in Ireland, where it is badly needed. We have discussed the matter to-day with the Commissioners of the Navy, who think it inconvenient that the change should be made. It would introduce great confusion into the naval accounts. As, however, money is constantly being demanded by the naval and victualling agents for their work, we propose that when any of them is in want of such money he should be allowed to apply to a merchant or other person at Cork, Kinsale, or Dublin, who shall furnish them therewith and be directed to give to such merchant or other person a bill to the Navy Board and Victuallers, by whom these bills will be accepted and punctually paid to the correspondents of those merchants in town. The sums will be considerable, especially during the war, and will be spent in Ireland, which will be an advantage to the country.

17 Dec.
Sick and Wounded Office.

The Commissioners of Sick and Wounded to Same.

On the complaint of Count de Mornay regarding the ill-treatment of the prisoners at Southampton, we have got the following information from a member of our board who came to town to-day from thence:—

On 4 December Captain Henley, who commands the prisoners' guard at Southampton, was, early in the morning, at the guardhouse adjoining the prison; and, taking himself to be affronted by some of the prisoners, caused the prison door to be opened and inquired for the prisoner who, he thought, had offended him; "but the prisoners all denying that any of them had so done, he made them all to be brought before him two by two, several of them being awaked out of their sleep for this purpose, and beat many of them as they passed, breaking two or three swords and as many musquets upon them." Captain Henley also took M. Silly, one of the French prisoners, out of his chamber and confined him to the watch house, because when M. Silly (being a Catholic) was allowed to go to church with the French Protestants on the late Thanksgiving-day, he "behaved himself very undecently."

We cannot discover what guards recently killed some French prisoners there, as all the guards have been moved since that time. Some examinations were, however, taken by the Mayor at the time, which will be sent here and forwarded to your lordship. We may say that the prisoners at Southampton acknowledge that they have been very well used by our officer in point of their subsistence and other accommodations; nor have we had any material complaints from them, but of the severity of the soldiers appointed for their guard, who, as we think, sometimes exceed their authority. We shall hear the Count de Mornay on M. de Pontchartrain's points raised on the cartel, and report.

Asks for information regarding French ships alleged to have been detained or condemned contrary to the Treaty of Ryswick. Note [in French]. Vessels detained before the declaration of war.

M. Van Vrybergen to [Hedges?].

As the House of Commons is about to examine the account of the proceedings of the five Commissioners appointed to examine and determine the debts due to the Army and Navy and for transport service, this is to desire your honour kindly to mind the concern of the owners of the Dutch transport ships. There is a clause made in their behalf in the Act of the last Parliament whereby the said Commissioners were authorised to state and determine their debt but to make out no debentures until the said debt had been certified to the Commons in Parliament. This now being performed it will, I think, be requisite the said Commissioners should be authorised to make out debentures for the said debt and transport service in the year 1690. How this should be done your honour will know best—whether it will fall in course, as I am told, or whether a motion must be made in order to have a clause inserted again in some new bill. If a motion is needed, none could make it so effectually as yourself. It would no doubt attain the ends in view expressed in the memorial presented through you to the Queen in the name of the States General.

18 Dec. Admiralty Office.

The Prince's Council to Nottingham.

We cannot agree to the request of the East India Company (on which our opinion is asked) that three ships should be appointed to go "thorough" to the East Indies to protect their trade there and suppress pirates, and that six more should go to the Cape and St. Helena. If so many ships go the other necessary services cannot be performed; and the ships sent to the East Indies must be long away and suffer much damage. They did so when they last went there. Moreover, their despatch may involve the Queen in a war. But if the Queen approves the immediate despatch of a fourth-rate to the Cape and another to St. Helena, and that two more vessels should afterwards be sent to St. Helena, they can be got ready as soon as her Majesty’s approval is given. If, however, the East India Company sends away an advice-boat to the Cape and three ships are sent next month to St. Helena, we think the Queen’s other occasions will be better complied with, and the home-coming merchantmen secured against anything but a squadron of the enemy, from which even the full force the Company desire would not save them if they met it. We find that in the late war all that was done was to appoint cruisers to wait for these home-coming merchant ships in the Soundings, and to escort them 200 leagues to sea upon going out.

COLONEL COLLIERS to NOTTINGHAM.

Details as to the Esperance of Derniville, which he has seized. She brought goods from France for the French refugees at Jersey, and was employed by one Chevalier, a merchant, who had lived long in Jersey and went only occasionally to France. Proceeds:—Chevalier and the refugees have often begged me for leave for him to go back to France in his boat. May he have it?

A French merchant has been brought in a prisoner. He and another arrived last night from St. Malo, and said they had come to buy tobacco and to make arrangements for getting it from here in the [ordinary] way of trade. I will send their examinations, when taken by the Justices.

Enclosing:—

Petition of Sebastian Chevalier to the Queen, shewing that:—

Petitioner has long traded in Jersey and, just before the declaration of war, had gone to France to try to recover some effects which belonged to some of the French refugees here, at their request. He obtained these and loaded them on his little boat. She has been detained [in Jersey] since May 10. As he came hither only to serve French refugees on English soil, and as he brought over two Englishmen; prays for release of self, boat and crew.

These instructions, by her Majesty’s command, are to supersede all earlier orders sent from me to you.

1. You are to come home with your ships next June, and with such ships of war of the States General as shall be appointed to accompany you. In all Councils of War relating to the actions in the Queen’s service by land or sea forces in which the said States’ forces are to join, you are to act in concert with the officers of the States, as has been usual in this and the late war.

2. But, before you leave the West Indies:—

(a) Leave at Jamaica two 4th rate, one 5th rate and one 6th rate ships—leaving those you think it best to leave—and the two fireships that were fitted by that Government, to guard that island.

(b) Appoint the three ships of your squadron which you think most suitable to come home as convoy with the merchant ships which, it is stated, are now in large numbers there, awaiting convoy home. Leave also two other ships with orders to be ready to come home as convoy to such merchant ships as are ready to come away at the beginning of August next, call at Plymouth, and, failing orders there, come on to the Downs.

* Those marked “r” write “refugié” after their names.

d) When leaving the West Indies, detail two proper ships with orders to their commander in chief to go to Virginia and act as convoy to any merchantmen which may be coming home thence, and to come to Plymouth for orders &c. (as foregoing paragraph).

d) Detail another ship to go to New York and convoy home the Benjamin transport, which is now loading masts and stores for her Majesty’s Navy, and to bring her home at once, and such other trade as may be bound home from New York and New England, and be ready to sail home with him.

3. On your way home call, with the ships of the States appointed to be with you, at Newfoundland, if you think the season will admit of your doing it with safety, and do your utmost to destroy the enemy at Placentia and any other of their harbours and stages. When doing this, detach one or two ships to do the same to the French fishery on the Bank, taking steps to have them rejoin you when you leave Newfoundland.

4. Imprest no men from privateers unless you want them for your squadron, and even then, take no more than is absolutely necessary.

5. If you have impressed, or impress, any men belonging to Jamaica, or have had them from that Government, restore them before you leave, or at least so many of them as you can safely restore.

6. When leaving Newfoundland take all English merchantmen under your care and appoint some of your ships to convoy those which may be bound for Portugal and see them safe into the Portuguese ports. Order the commander of such convoy to go first to Lisbon and then to O port [Oporto], and then to come home without further stay.

Sick and Wounded Office.

The Commissioners of Sick and Wounded to Nottingham.

We have sent to Oxford all the French prisoners of note except the Marquis [de la] Gallissonnière, Count [de] Mornay, M. des Coyeux, M. du Chatell and M. Bégon, who are indisposed and will follow as soon as their health will permit. It will be costly in guards to keep these [at Oxford] confined in their chambers, and we think they would be most secure on their parole to remain prisoners at war and not remove from their lodgings without orders.

JOSIAH BURCHETT to NOTTINGHAM.

As recommended last Sunday night by her Majesty in Council, the Prince’s Council have this evening discoursed with several gentlemen of the East India Company regarding the ships they desire for protection [home] from St. Helena and against pirates in India.

We told them how many necessities pressed upon the service; and in the end they departed satisfied in case her Majesty will let them have three fourth-rates to secure their trade in from St. Helena and one fourth and one fifth to proceed throughout to India. The Prince’s Council think this reasonable, as, by the uniting of the two companies, very considerable effects are expected home.

They desire the Queen’s commands therein that the necessary orders may be given.

HEDGES to MR. EDMUNDS.

I have yours of Nov. 23, and will discourse on it if you care to come here.

NOTTINGHAM’S LETTERS.

1. To the Recorder of London.

I send a petition and ask for a report on it. If the facts are as alleged, it is certainly a case for mercy.

Note.—The petition was of Francis Wilson, whose son James, not 12 years old, is condemned for cutting and stealing a couple of bags from off a horse in “Pickadilly,” and to be executed to-morrow. Prays for the Queen’s favour.

2. To the Same.

The Queen leaves Mary Jones to the ordinary course of justice.

3. To the Duke of Marlborough.

I send a report by the Commissioners of Sick and Wounded on a complaint of the ill-treatment of French prisoners. Give such orders as will prevent the like in future.

NOTTINGHAM to the COMMISSIONERS OF SICK and WOUNDED.

The Duke of Marlborough has been instructed to punish the officer responsible for the recent ill-treatment of French prisoners at Southampton. You may tell Count de Mornay this; also that I am considering the French observations on the cartel: but, meantime, that we are ready to exchange man for man, and to send away as many Frenchmen as there are Englishmen in France. As we are at war with France and Spain and have 1702. no opportunity of dealing with Spain but through France, and as we know of no English prisoners in Spain, we will release Spaniards in exchange for the Englishmen who are in France. We presume this will not be refused. The Queen will insist on having back her subjects, wherever they are, in exchange for those of either France or Spain.

ROYAL WARRANT to the CHIEF GOVERNOR of IRELAND.

By letters under the Royal Sign Manual dated 30 May, 1699, King William III ordered letters to pass under the Great Seal of Ireland granting 1,200l. a year in one entire pension to Robert Craighead, Alexander Hutchinson, James Bruce, Francis Irdell, John McBridge, John Malcome, John Hutchinson and Archibald Rose, and to the survivor or survivors of them, for the use of themselves and the Presbyterian ministers in the north of Ireland, during pleasure.

We are pleased, on their petition, to renew this grant, which is void by the late King’s death. Cause letters to pass &c. granting to the foregoing (except Rose) and to Andrew Ferguson, William Holmes, sen., John Stirling, Robert Halting, Thomas Orr, James Kirkpatrick and the survivors of them, or their appointees, the like sum, for the like use, to commence from the time when the sum was last paid. The money so paid shall be held by them in trust to pay it to Presbyterian ministers according to a list approved by the Chief Governor of Ireland from time to time. Insert this sum in the Civil List. Effectual clauses.

JOSIAH BURCHETT to RICHARD WARRE.

I send, for Lord Secretary Nottingham, copy of his Royal Highness’s instructions to Vice-Admiral Benbow relating to the Earl of Peterborough. Orders are also ready for the Prince to sign requiring the Vice-Admiral to supply his lordship with powder and shot on occasion, as also beds and hammacoes [hammocks]* for the landmen. Pray inform Lord Secretary Nottingham of this.

HEDGES to the COMMISSIONERS of PRIZES.

The King of Denmark’s Envoy Extraordinary here has complained to me that John Dirickson, master of a Danish ship called the St. Jacob, taken by Captain Gaffell of the privateer Swift, has been kept prisoner at Dover ten days without examination. This should have been done forthwith. Give orders to have it done, that he may, if discharged, go on to Denmark.

*As to Carib origin of this word see Murray’s English Dictionary, s.v. ‘hammock.’*
DR. CHARLETT to [NOTTINGHAM].

As the Vice-Chancellor is away, I write to say that the Marquis d'Aligre and thirteen French gentlemen and their servants are here. I had orders from the Duke of Ormond to treat them civilly, which has been done, "having upon their first visit waited upon them to the Theatre, Schools and Repository."

"Yesterday I was sent to know whether they might have the liberty of shooting in the Fields, a question I could give no direct answer to (but advised them to forbear, being an exercise prohibited our own Body), having received no orders." I thought it right to let you know this.

Josiah Burchett to Richard Warre.

Sends a petition of merchants trading to Portugal. Asks that it be laid before the Queen in Council and directions given on it. The merchants are very pressing.

A. Petition to the Lord High Admiral of divers Merchants of London trading to Portugal, shewing that:—

There is in the Downs and at Portsmouth, a considerable fleet of merchant ships bound for Portugal (being more than 100 sail) wherein petitioners have exported great quantities of woollen and other goods, and have given orders to import great quantities of wine and other goods which, when they come, will greatly import the Queen's customs. Petitioners' goods will suffer by delay. They are, many of them, part owners of the vessels and have lost cables &c. by bad weather, and by wages, provisions and damage to perishable corn,* during the delay.

They pray that the convoy promised by your Royal Highness may take the above ships under their charge and proceed on their voyage as soon as wind and weather will permit.

Sir S. Lovell Recorder [of London] to [NOTTINGHAM?].

I did not receive from your lordship any directions in relation to James Wilson, the boy under sentence. 'Tis grown a very common offence and requires some examples of justice to prevent the growth of it. It is mostly acted by boys and managed by others. This premised by Mrs. Whittle, who was burnt in the face as accessory, and this boy had judgment as principal, and proved by Haynes, his partner, a boy too. But this Haynes I caused to be brought before me, and he declares on oath that one Richard Cheney, a soldier under Major Shrimpton, and an old offender, was the chief manager of Wilson and Haynes both, and very frequently went out with them a thieving. Wilson has charged his father to have received 10s., part of the robbery. His father is a bad man.

My Lord, I fear this boy has been enticed and encouraged between these two ill men, and is in danger to be their sacrifice unless the Queen will please to respite execution, which I humbly wish, the rather because I am in further prosecution of the matter, and have this day committed "Cheney" to Newgate for robbery. I have enclosed a warrant against "Chany" on the oath of the father Wilson, who neglected to execute it. I know not why, unless it was fear of a discovery that he or his woman (not wife) had had part of the prize. They say that "Cheney" had 3l. of it, and Cheney says they had a share. I shall be obliged by a line from your lordship before Wednesday next, that being the day for the execution.

P.S.—I sent for the ordinary, who tells me this boy "has been much neglected, and knows not that there is such a thing as the Lord's Prayer."

Warrant.

On complaint to me, one of the Justices of the Peace for the said County or Liberty, by Francis Wilson that Richard Chaney has entertained and encouraged James Wilson, his son, as a thief and so to be, and harboured him in his house when run away from him (his father). These are to order you to arrest him &c. [usual form] and bring him before me to be examined touching the premises and further dealt with according to law.

27 Dec. SIR THOMAS HOPSONN to [NOTTINGHAM].

I intercede on behalf of Captain Urry, who lies condemned by a Court-Martial to be shot. I am grieved that this [shame] falls upon his family, for I remember "when I was a youth in the Isle of Wight that his father had the character of a very loyal gentleman, and when King Charles I was made prisoner in Carsbrooke Castle he privately amongst his friends made up a purse of gold and gave it to the King, who was then in want." I could say more, but merely beg for his pardon. He is ancient, and has an ancient wife, who is now on her death-bed, and begs that they may see each other before they die. She is very weak, and if this liberty can be granted before the Council sits, I will be responsible for his forthcoming, for I know him to be an honest man. The Court-Martial was equal on both sides, so that there was no casting voice. I ask for his life and your pardon for troubling you.

The COMMISSIONERS OF SICK and WOUNDED to NOTTINGHAM.

We desire express orders as to the release from duty of one of our messengers lately appointed to attend the Spanish Admiral.

We shall ask as to the health of the French prisoners still in town, and take care that they be conducted to Oxford so soon as they are fit to travel.

30 Dec. [Richard] Hill to Lord [Nottingham ?].
Bearer is the person whose representation I put into your lordship's hands. He is to wait on you according to your orders.

Latest date, Proceedings of the Commissioners for the Union.

Admiralty Office. His Royal Highness's command:—To lay enclosed extract before the Queen in Council and move her Majesty for orders to transfer the soldiers in the Rochester, Tilbury and Charles galley into the transport ships bound to the West Indies [to which the soldiers were going], as all the men-of-war are under orders to sail from Spithead.

Captain Owen to [Josiah Burchett].

Yesterday I brought in 30 merchantmen, many of which were laden with her Majesty's stores. The Tilbury and Charles galley are with me. On my application to the Commissioner of Transports I find there are no ships here capable of receiving the soldiers. I pray an order about their removal. Have put ashore already 18 sick seamen dangerously ill, and have divers cases every day. Some that we have thrown overboard appeared to die of spotted fever. We have 300 soldiers and their officers on board and my own ship's company. I have ordered the Tilbury and Charles galley to proceed according to his Royal Highness's commands, which they will put in execution as soon as rid of the soldiers.

St. James'. Present:—The Queen in Council.
A memorial from the Lord High Admiral, dated 16 December, 1702, was read. It stated that there may not be enough men to enable the fleet to go to sea in good time next year, and recommended a request being sent to the Government of Scotland to bring in as many men as they can to Leith by February 28, 1703, as was done in 1691; and that the Navy Board should be authorised to have 40s. bounty money paid to the sailors who should so be brought in when they appear on board the ship sent for them.

Order. Request approved and to send this memorial to Secretary Nottingham. His Royal Highness to direct the Navy Board to make the allowance of bounty money suggested.

IRISH WARRANTS.

These are entries of warrants addressed to the Lord Lieutenant or Chief Governor for the time being, and or the Lords Justices, of Ireland. Where the warrants are for payment of money, they are countersigned by Lord Treasurer Godolphin; in other cases by a Secretary of State, almost always Nottingham. The warrants are entered in S.P. Ireland, Entry Book 3, &c., and entries of them are also in nearly every case preserved in the Signet Office Books (Nos. 14, 15, et seq.). The following table notes the addressee of the warrant and its date and substance, and gives the references to the books from which the entries are taken. A few of the most important and interesting letters or warrants (see e.g. 13 and 24 March, above, pp. 5, 10), seemed to deserve a place in the body of the Calendar, and are therefore placed there; as is the Military establishment for Ireland for 1702.

TABLE VI.

Weekly Lists of Ships of the Home Fleet with their Stations and Orders.

These are lists prepared by the Prince's Council and sent to the Secretary of State, shewing the men and guns services, stations, orders to and movements of the various vessels in the Royal Navy. The first list in this period is dated 2 July, 1702, and is enclosed in a letter of 3 July from Burchett to Nottingham, which will be found set out above, pp. 162, 163. The lists are generally dated from the Admiralty Office, so it is not thought necessary to repeat this address, but the date of each list is given, and in each case the most important movements, combinations or orders are briefly summarised.

From S.P. Dom., Naval 111:—

9 July. Similar to the list enclosed in Burchett’s letter to Nottingham of 3 July, 1702, q.v. above, pp. 162, 163. Ships are added to cruise off Lynn, Boston and Cromer.—Pp. 581–3.

23 July. Similar to the list of 16 July, above, q.v. A list of ships under Sir Cloudesley Shovell is broken up, and the orders to various ships are given. The unmanned ships at Portsmouth and Blackstakes are manning, or ordered to man, again. Details as to the Dunkirk squadron and the movements of the various ships detailed for convoys.—Pp. 589–91.

30 July. Similar to foregoing. Mentions the ships which are at sea with Sir C. Shovell or to join him. The unmanned vessels &c. [as above at 23 July]. Details of convoys.—Pp. 593–5.

5 Aug. This list gives names of the ships of the first tour rates, which, according to the best judgment that can be made thereof, may with the usual refittings be in a condition for the next year’s service at sea. The list is similar to the first part of that calendared below at 26 August, 1702 [q.v.]. It shews which of these ships are in sea pay, and which are fit for sea, under repair or building.

The following is an abstract of the list:—

TABLE VII.

PASSES, NOTES OF PASSES, POST WARRANTS AND LICENCES OF ABSENCE.

These are gathered together by months, but it has not been thought needful to set them out in strict chronological order; which is not followed in the original Entry Books. The full passes are signed (by Nottingham in Entry Book 389, by Manchester or Hedges in Entry Book 387), but the brief notes of passes are not signed. In the case of passes, or notes thereof, the words "pass for" are not repeated: but post warrants are expressly noted as such. The licences of absence are gathered together at the end of the year.

TABLE VIII.
Orders on Petitions.
These are Entries of Petitions and Notes of the Order made on them at Court. The entries are signed by a Secretary of State and the note of reference directs the referee to report on the petition, and (unless the entry shews otherwise) says that the Queen will, on receipt of the report, declare her further pleasure. It is not thought necessary to repeat this fact in every case. The petitioners' names, the substance of the petition and date of reference and name of the referee are given in each case. The entries in S.P. Dom., Entry Book No. 237, are countersigned by Vernon; those in Entry Book 238 by Manchester or Hedges; those in Entry Book 239 by Nottingham; those in Entry Book 240 by Hedges.

One or two petitions, containing information of general interest, have been placed in the body of the Calendar.*

MARCH, 1702.

She is the only surviving daughter and heir to John, late Lord Lovelace of Hurley, and sole heir (by her grandmother, Lady Anne Wentworth, Baroness Lovelace &c.) to the barony of Wentworth. Her petition shows that King Henry VIII, in 1529 by writ directed to Sir Thomas Wentworth of Nettlested in Suffolk, summoned him to be a baron and peer of England by the name of Thomas, Lord Wentworth; by virtue whereof the said Sir Thomas and the heirs of his body have ever since enjoyed the barony of Wentworth with all privileges &c. until the death in 1664 of Thomas, Lord Wentworth. He left only one daughter, Lady Henrietta Maria, who also died without issue, whereby the Lady Anne Wentworth, relict of John, Lord Lovelace, and mother to John, late Lord Lovelace, petitioner's father (being the only surviving daughter of Thomas, Lord Wentworth, Earl of Cleveland &c. and aunt to the said Henrietta Maria), became heir to the said barony. This lady lately died, whereby petitioner is become the sole and undoubted heir of that barony of Wentworth, and the lawful inheritrix of all the lands and seigniories thereunto belonging.

Prays for confirmation of the barony to herself and the heirs of her body with the usual privileges as have been granted to many families in England.

26 Mar. Leonard Kuish [or Knish].

He has undertaken the drawing and printing of most of the noblemen's and gentlemen's seats of England, with whom he has entered into articles. Understanding that some envious people have sent most of them to Holland to be copied, with a design to sell them here for less than half price, in regard of his expense in travelling all over England for the last five years, he asks for the Queen's sole licence to sell the same, with prohibition to all others to sell them of any size.

26 March, Whitehall. Ref. Attorney or Solicitor General—

* See e.g. at 27 June, 1702. (Inhabitants of All Saints, Oxford.)
1702.            [About 1702.]

The Duke is seized in fee or fee tail with a remainder to the Duchess, his mother, of and in "the chief mansion house now called Arlington House, formerly called Goring House with several out-houses, stables and gardens thereunto belonging, and a house and garden called Pimlico and a field or meadow enclosed with a brick wall thereunto adjoining, bounded on the East with St. James' Park, and on the South with the highway leading to Chelsea, with the appurtenances in the County of Middlesex." Petitioner receives only 400l. a year out of this estate, and there is a considerable debt, 3,000l., charged on it by petitioner's late grandfather the Earl of Arlington. Another debt of 5,700l. or thereabouts is charged on petitioner's estate of Euston in Norfolk, for both which debts your petitioner pays yearly interest.

Several parts of (the said estate) are in disrepair, and it will cause petitioner great expense to amend and keep them up. There is likewise a term for years in an estate called Grafton in Northamptonshire to be sold, the reversion whereof belongs to petitioner, and the purchase whereof would be a good and convenient addition to his estate and revenue. The Marquis of Normanby, who is now in possession of all the premises in Middlesex except the said meadow field, has agreed to pay 13,000l. for the purchase of the premises in Middlesex, which the petitioner, his mother, Lord Godolphin and Fox, agree to be the full value thereof, and it would be very advantageous to your petitioner and his affairs that it should now be sold and the 13,000l. applied to pay off the charges and buy up the said term (in Grafton). The same is, however, obstructed, to petitioner's prejudice, because, during his minority, he cannot suffer a recovery thereof without your Majesty's leave and direction under your Privy Seal.

Prays for letters of Privy Seal to the Lord Chief Justice and other Justices of the Common Pleas to permit the petitioner, the Duke of Grafton, to appear by his guardian in the said Court, to suffer a common recovery of the premises in Middlesex for the sale thereof, for the price and purposes aforesaid.

No reference or date. Entered next foregoing.—S.P. Dom., Entry Book 237, pp. 296–7.

MAY, 1702.

4 May. Colonel John Gibson, Lieutenant Governor of Portsmouth.

He represents [with details] the danger and inconvenience of allowing buildings on the common between the town of Portsmouth and the dockyard. Danger in case of attack. Interruption of communications. He relates his and the town major's efforts to prevent such buildings, and prays for further such orders to prevent it as will protect him.
1702.

4 May, Whitehall. Ref. Attorney General to hold an inquiry [details], and report as to the buildings and alleged danger, and the possibility of removing them.—S.P. Dom., Entry Book 239, p. 1.

4 May. Mrs. Anne Bagnall.

Her husband, Dudley Bagnall’s estate in Ireland was forfeited during his life, and, by the late Act relating to Irish forfeitures, vested in certain trustees for public uses. The said Act secured her a small annuity out of the estate for maintenance of herself and her seven children, otherwise unprovided for during their father’s life.

Dudley Bagnall is 71 years old, and very weak and ill, and petitioner is advised that, owing to the probable war, it is not safe for her to go to France, where he is, to take care of him, and that if she corresponds with him or sends him any supplies in time of war it may be imputed to her as a crime.

By the late Act of Parliament,* all who went to France since December, 1688 [without licence from the late King or Queen], are, upon the penalty of high treason, forbidden to return without licence; so that petitioner cannot without her Majesty’s licence do anything to support her said husband. Prays that her husband may have licence to return to England on giving security for good behaviour.

5 May. John Gape and other Aldermen of St. Albans.

John Gape, Esq., John Selioke, William Marston, Thomas Crosfield, Samuel Loft, Henry Dobyne, Edward Forsell, Nicholas Sparling, William Stone, and Francis Halford are Aldermen as aforesaid. They show that a Court being held within the borough on 29 April last, it was, after mature deliberation, resolved to make no freemen of the borough, and that the Court should be adjourned, and it was so adjourned. Notwithstanding the said adjournment, Edward Seabrooke, the present Mayor, John Tisdale and George Cooke, the two remaining Aldermen, and John Leigh, an attorney (instead of the Town Clerk), in an arbitrary and illegal manner did proceed to make freemen, and made free about threescore persons, most of them poor and improper persons to be members of the said borough, in great violation of the charters and by-laws of the said borough, against the will of the petitioners who are ten of the twelve Aldermen of the borough, and the persons of right to hold the said Court. Such irregular proceedings may have dangerous results.

Pray for Queen’s directions.

11 May. William Viscount Montgomery.

Went to France shortly after 25 Dec., 1688, having got a licence from King William (when Prince of Orange) to travel. Recites

* 9 Will. III, c. 1. relevant provision of 9 William III, c. 1. Proceeds: In obedience to that Act petitioner went into Spanish Flanders, where he has remained above 4 years to his great damage. [Details.]

Prays for licence to return.

11 May. Mary Huntington, widow.
Her husband was made Bishop of Raphoe by King William in June last and went to Ireland and was consecrated, but died about a month later. His journey was expensive and his fees for passing his patents and other charges amounted to several hundreds of pounds, and petitioner is not entitled to the rents and profits which fell due at All Saints' tide.

Prays for such a grant out of the mesne profits of the Bishopric as the Queen thinks fit.

12 May. John Snaepes [?].
He was master of one of the ships belonging to John Holder when the Cowdsty galley was burnt and destroyed, and that he is in the King's Bench prison. Meeting therein with the Gazette, in which is inserted the late King's offer of pardon to anyone who would discover the fraud of Holder and others in burning the said ship, in order to defraud several persons both in England and foreign parts, the petitioner employed friends to go to the insurers, or their agents, to whom he revealed the matter, and promised to produce one Suckley, who was master of the said ship when she was burnt. The agents, however, taking advantage of the information, found Suckley themselves, and petitioner is like to lose the benefit of the information.

Same. The Farmers, Hoymen, Fishermen and Other Inhabitants in and about Herne in Kent.
There is a bay belonging to the said town wherein vessels used in the fishing trade and in bringing provisions to London generally ride. As it lies open to the sea it will be much exposed to French privateers; so that the petitioners, who lost greatly in the late war and were frequently “insulted” by the French, fear that they will be ruined and their town burnt.
Pray for ten guns and ammunition. Details.

13 May. Royal African Company.
The French Guinea Company have made a contract at Madrid for supplying the Spanish West Indies with negroes in which they are very much supported and encouraged by the French King.

Advices from Nevis in February last informed petitioners that three French men-of-war were cruising on the south part of Africa. Petitioners have several forts on that coast which cannot be supported but by frequent supplies of men and stores. They are of absolute necessity for preserving the trade of those parts to the Queen's subjects and supplying the plantations with negroes. For their defence petitioners have fitted out the under-mentioned ships which cannot now proceed safely by reason of the war with France and Spain.

They pray that some frigates may be ordered to cruise on the south part of Guinea for their protection and that the said ships may be allowed to proceed under their convoy.

The ships are:

The Serelion, brigantine, 80 tons, 10 guns, 18 men, 16 passengers, Captain George Cockerell.

The Royal Africa, 370 tons, 30 guns, 48 men, 30 passengers, Captain Alexander Gates.

The Angola, frigate, 125 tons, 12 guns, 24 men, 12 passengers, Captain Thomas Arnall.

The St. Winifrid, 160 tons, 10 guns, 24 men, Captain William Owen.

13 May. Captain William Flower.

He is brother and legatee to Captain Thomas Flower, deceased. Whilst Captain Thomas was in England in 1689 and 1690 all his stock in the Co. Kilkenny in Ireland to the value of 5,000l. was seized on for the use of King James II. Amongst it was 223cwt. 0grs. 26lbs. of wool, which was carried into the stores at Waterford and partly delivered in barter for 1,025 barrels of wheat. The wheat, on surrender at Waterford, was applied to the use of the English army, and the rest of the said wool remained then in the said stores.

In 1692 petitioner's brother petitioned the Lord Lieutenant and Council of Ireland for satisfaction of the said wool and wheat. They, upon examination in June, 1693, recommended the petition as deserving favour. It was thence referred to many officials [details] for report as to the extent of his brother's loss, and the loss was certified at 615l.

Petitioner's brother died without receiving satisfaction for his wool and wheat, and left his interest to the petitioner.

Petitioner served the Crown long and faithfully in the Guards in Ireland under King Charles II, where he continued until broken by the Earl of Tyrconnell for being a Protestant. He then went to Holland and came back with his late Majesty. He was commissioned again, went to Ireland with the Duke of Schomberg and served right through the war there. He is now in the list of half-pay in Ireland.

Wt. 3880.
1702. Sir Samuel Barnardiston.

His petition shows that in 1683–4 a very arbitrary judgment was given against him by Chief Justice Jefferys, and he was fined 10,000£. and continued close prisoner for five years until King William acceded. His real and personal estate were seized, his house plundered, his goods sold at under rates, and his effects and mortgages sold, out of which about 7,000£. was made and paid into the Exchequer; and by extortion and embezzlement of under-sheriffs, bailiffs, jailers and the like he was damned into above 20,000£. 1,905£. odd of his own money, paid into the Exchequer and remaining in specie there, came, on 5 November, 1688, to the late King's hands, and was paid out to the Earl of Ranelagh.

On appeal to the House of Lords the judgment was reversed as illegal and arbitrary, and this reversal was afterwards confirmed by a particular Act of Parliament. Petitioner has not, however, obtained any satisfaction for his great sufferings, nor for the said 1,905£. odd after 12 years' petition, more than the bare principal, out of which was detained by the officers of the Exchequer near 100£. for pretended fees.

Prays for justice in the premises and an order for interest and repayment of the pretended Exchequer fees.

18 May. Captain Byng.

Petitioner was late first captain to the Captain General of the fleet, and received by right the half-pay of a Rear-Admiral. He is now out of employment and wants support for self and family.

Prays for half-pay till employed in his former or some other post.

Same. Isaac Marryot.

In the time of King Charles II he was for many years concerned in the land revenue of the Crown as clerk-assistant to the chief Auditor thereof and thereby discovered great concealments, upwards of 100,000£. a year in value. Encouraged by a grant of some of these by King James II, he proceeded to recover several "branches" of the said revenue, and was much obstructed by those who had intruded on those lands. In the time of King William he offered to discover the said concealments but was stifled by those concerned in the revenue.

Her Majesty by calling home these estates may raise several millions of money by fines and leasing the same, and yet reserve the ancient yearly value reserved on the same. Many possessors of the estates are ready and anxious to have this done to create themselves titles, they being allowed some reasonable compensation for their improvements made on the premises. Petitioner has expended about 7,000£. to preserve the rights of the Crown, and has many valuable and private collections of great estates from neglect withheld from the Crown, which he is ready to discover. He is now grown old and infirm, and if his endeavours should by his death become abortive the Crown will be a great loser.

Prays for an inquiry into his discoveries and allegations.

19 May. Sir Henry Johnson (on behalf of the town of Aldborough).

Aldborough is situated on an open bay where the colliers for London usually ride going and coming. Other vessels also ride there, and the bay is open to the sea, and exposed to privateers. Queen Elizabeth gave the town twenty-four guns for defence of the bay and ships, and in time of war they were supplied with powder, ball, match, and gun carriages out of the stores of the Ordnance.

The townspeople ask that they may have the same quantity as granted to them in the last war.

Same. John Grosvenour, of Chester, Gentleman.

His father, Sir Richard, was brought "near the utmost extremity of ruin" by his expenses in the service of the Royal family in the Civil War. In the invasion of the Duke of Monmouth, petitioner and his whole family took up arms for the Crown, and soon after he obtained a commission for a troop of horse, which he raised and clothed at his own charge. This cost him 600l., of which he was never repaid a farthing, though it was allowed and paid to the Colonel in the usual way. The place of Customer of the port of Chester is now held by Mr. Richard Meredith, who is incapable of such a trust and his patent void by the death of the [late] King.

Prays for that place.

21 May. Robert Bradenham.

About May, 1699, was arrested "at Pensilvania" on suspicion of piracy and sent for England, where he gave evidence against Captain Kidd and other pirates at an Admiralty Sessions held at the Old Bailey in May, 1701. There was then seized certain treasure belonging to him to the value of 350l. or thereabouts, which was likewise sent for England and now remains in the Admiralty. An account of this was sent over by William Penn, Esq., Governor of Pennsylvania, and was taken on oath by Lieutenant-Governor Markham, and is now with the Commissioners of Trade and Plantations. [Details.]

Prays for restitution.

21 May. The Russia Company.

They have many ships bound for Archangel, of which some will be ready to sail on 25 May, and the rest on 20 June. These ships will carry great quantities of British manufactured goods and are to bring back stores for the service of the Navy.

They pray for a convoy for each fleet, to stay at Archangel 25 days after the arrival of the last convoy; also for protection for their seamen to dispatch their ships hence.

22 May. Robert Lydall.

His petition shows that by his long study and great expense he has found out and brought to perfection “a new way of smelting and melting black tin into good merchantable white tin in a reverberatory furnace without the help of bellows, by means of some peculiar fluxes whereby not only a greater produce of white tin is made out of the black tin and with less charge than usual,” but also the use and consumption of wood and charcoal which in melting and smelting black tin into white tin has been very great, will be much diminished to the great benefit of the public.

Prays for a grant of Royal letters patent for the sole use and benefit of the said invention for 14 years according to the Statute &c.

Same. The Constables, Churchwardens &c. of Brighthelmston.

In time of war they are usually allowed necessary provisions and ammunition for putting themselves in a state of defence. The present occasion requiring the like assistance, they pray for an order for ammunition and carriages for their guns.

Same. Inhabitants of Newhaven.

Their town and port is very much exposed to the enemy for want of a fort and great guns, “which with the assistance of the fort at Seaford, if that be well supplied, will command the whole bay” and secure England’s and her allies’ ships which may be forced to anchor there.

They pray for four guns with ammunition.

22 May, Whitehall. Ref. as foregoing. Ibid, p. 495.

23 May. Robert Lucy.

Is a son of the late Bishop Lucy of St. David’s. He is register of the diocese of St. David’s and was promoter and prosecutor of the articles against Dr. Thomas Watson, late Bishop of the said diocese, to the Archbishop of Canterbury for “simony and other enormous crimes and misdemeanours.”
1702.

After a hearing with counsel and witnesses, the Archbishop gave sentence of deprivation against the Bishop which, on appeal, was confirmed by the Court of Delegates.

When Dr. Watson was deprived, petitioner obtained a deputation from the Commissioners of the Treasury to collect the temporalities of the Bishoprick during the vacancy. Petitioner has since collected these to the best of his ability, and has laid before your Lordships an account of his receipts therein.

Petitioner has been at above five years' expense in prosecuting the said Dr. Watson to a deprivation. Litigation cost him over 2,000l. There were 150 witnesses and 2,000 pages of depositions and numerous fees to advocates, proctors and registers. Petitioner fought the case only in the interest of the poor clergy in the diocese and for the public good.

Petitioner had judgment against the said Bishop for 913l. for costs of the proceedings before the Archbishop and Delegates, and the Bishop is excommunicated for non-payment; but petitioner cannot recover on the judgment because the cursitor refused to make out process against the Bishop.

During the vacancy of the Bishoprick the petitioner is suspended from his office as register, and depends purely on the bounty and good-will of the Archbishop of Canterbury's register, to whom he is accountable for all fees received during the vacancy.

Prays for consideration of his case and expenses.

25 May. The Governor and Company of Hudson's Bay.

The places to which they trade are in such a climate as only to be navigable once a year, which is at this juncture. The country is so barren that petitioners are compelled to provide their factories once a year with supplies from England, and they think that attempts on them may be made this year by the French. To supply the factories and to defend them against the insults of the French they have fitted out a ship called the Hudson's Bay frigate, Michael Grimington commander, and have provided officers and soldiers for defence thereof.

They ask for leave for the ship to proceed notwithstanding the embargo, and protection for 22 seamen and 12 landmen; also for her Majesty's commission to Captain John Fullartine, their commander-in-chief, as has been accustomed on the like occasions.

27 May. Sir John Delaval, Bart.

His eldest brother was married to Lady Elizabeth Hatchet, who, by her marriage settlement, had a jointure of 800l. a year, to which petitioner is entitled in reversion. Lady Elizabeth is still in possession of the same, by means whereof the petitioner can make no settlement of that estate, either upon his marriage or any other account, except she enables him to suffer a common recovery thereon. The Lady Elizabeth is now in France, and, if she could return, would gladly gratify the petitioner in this matter. By reason of a defect in a former settlement, the estate will, if the petitioner die before the said lady without male issue, descend to another family and not of the same name.

Prays for a licence for the said lady to return to England.

28 May. Alland Cathcart, Merchant.

In the year 1688 there was taken from him by order of Colonel Gustavus Hamilton, then Governor of Inniskilling, several sorts of goods, as tanned leather, salt, iron, timber, &c., to the value of 332l. 16s. 9d. for support of the Inniskilling garrison. Had it not been for this requisition, Inniskilling must have fallen into the enemy's hands, as shewn by a certificate signed by Colonel Hamilton.

In January, 1688–9, petitioner was sent by the Governor to represent the condition of the garrison to their late Majesties which cost petitioner 72l. His cellar of 1,800 gallons of brandy was, in his absence, taken by the officers and men of the garrison; his horses and boat taken, and the boat rendered useless. His total loss in this way was 11,000l., which was never made good. He obtained no satisfaction from the Commissioners for stating the accounts of the army (details). To show his fidelity to the present Government he raised and maintained two companies (one for eight months and one for three), armed and furnished them, &c. He was the first man that caused a drum to beat in Inniskilling for their late Majesties' service, all which may appear by certificates produced and signed by the Provost of Inniskilling, Brigadier Woolsley, Colonel Creighton, Colonel Gustavus Hamilton and the Commissioners for stating accounts for the army.

In 1696 he petitioned for relief but his petition was neglected, as the conspiracy against the late King was just then discovered. Could not maintain himself in England till the hurry of the late conspiracy was over, and returned to Ireland with nothing.

Prays for consideration and payment.

Same. Inhabitants of Whitby.

Eight guns were granted them during the last Dutch wars and are still at Whitby. The Board of Ordnance furnished them with ammunition during the late war with France. They need supplies, have many enemies, and have many ships to protect by reason of the late Act for repairing the piers of Whitby.

Pray for grant of such ammunition and supplies as may be thought proper.

ANNE.

1702.

Has long been a carpenter, but is too old to work and is in great want. Prays for admission to the next vacancy as an almsman in Christchurch, Canterbury.

Note that the petition was signed by the Dean, some pre-bendaries and several eminent hands.

29 May, Whitehall. Petition granted. Clerk of the Signet to prepare a bill accordingly.—S.P. Dom., Entry Book 240, p. 4.

JUNE, 1702.

2 June. Wm. Gardner, of Wesham.

Received from King William the grant of an almsman’s place in the Cathedral Church of Worcester. He fears that the King’s death may invalidate his title thereto and prays for confirmation.

2 June, Whitehall. Petition granted. Clerk of the Signet to prepare a bill accordingly.—Ibid, p. 7.

Same. Several Merchants and Traders by Sea of London.

The fort of Sheryn was of very great advantage during the late war in that it commands the haven of Baltimore and could protect ships which took refuge there from privateers and bad weather. It may still be so, as the harbour is most commodiously situated on the line of trade, being but two leagues east of Cape Clear. It can receive ships of great burthen and is suited for victualling, and petitioners "conceive it to be the most necessary port for securing the south and western commerce and navigation." They pray that the said garrison may be restored and further fortified.

2 June, Whitehall. Ref. Lord Lieutenant of Ireland.—

3 June. Thomas Morton and Elizabeth, his wife.

Mrs. Cole, of Bradfield, in Wilts, their sister, had by a former husband an only daughter, Margaret James, who is an idiot and unable to manage herself or estate. Cole was possessed of a small estate, scarcely more than will maintain the said idiot, and died leaving no other provision for her than the said estate.
Petitioners are her nearest relatives, by the mother’s side, and are anxious that an honourable provision may be made for her out of it, and that her custody be not granted to strangers, who must keep her very poorly if they are going to make any profit out of the custody. They pray for the custody of Mrs. James and her estate on the return of an inquisition already issued.

3 June, Whitehall. Ref. Attorney and Solicitor General.—

8 June. Charles Eversfield and Others.

His petition (and that of Nicholas Best, Esq., his guardian, and of Nicholas Gilbert and Mary his wife and Robert Rochester and Jane his wife, Mary and Jane being sisters and next heirs to the first petitioner), shews that Eversfield is an infant of 18 years and is seised in fee or fee tail of and in the several manors of Gestling, Gensing, Amington and Wephurst or Whephurst, Charlton, Yelding and Deane, with all their appurtenances, and of several other farms and lands in Sussex. A treaty of marriage has, with the consent of Eversfield's guardian, been concluded between Eversfield and Mary Duncomb, of Guildford, in Surrey, and provision is made therein for her jointure and for settling Eversfield's estate on his heirs male by this marriage, or daughters if there is no issue male &c. Eversfield cannot make this settlement unless he and his sisters be admitted by warrant under the Privy Seal to suffer one or more common recoveries.

Prays for letters under the Privy Seal to the Lord Chief Justice and other Justices of the Common Pleas to admit Eversfield, by his guardian in the said Court, to suffer a common recovery in such manner as may be advised by counsel.

8 June. Lemuel Matthews, D.D.

Is Archdeacon and Chancellor of Down and Prebendary of Carncastle in the diocese of Connor. His petition shews that in the fifth year of King William III the Bishops of Derry and Meath were appointed by commission to visit in the dioceses of Down and Connor and investigate alleged offences there, and give redress. They gave several pretended definitive sentences against petitioner without any just cause, as he humbly conceives, and in an extraordinary and arbitrary procedure ex officio suo mero et nobili and, as he is advised, contrary to the form and tenor of the said commission and also contrary to the rules and course of Ecclesiastical law, and for matters of which they had no jurisdiction. The Commissioners did not charge the petitioner with any immorality or enormity or with any of the offences signified in their commission. They did not pretend that petitioner had incurred the penalty of any canon or other law or that he had not the right of appeal against their sentences. Petitioner appealed to the late King and Queen against these as excessive and null, as was usual in the case of persons aggrieved by the decisions of Royal Commissioners for ecclesiastical causes, in the Supreme Court of Prerogative in Ireland. Petitioner was unfortunately misrepresented to their Majesties by powerful adversaries and, being bereaved of his livelihood and excommunicated by the sentences, was not able to procure the counsels necessary to clear himself of the charges made against him, and of the measures under which he was oppressed, so as to obtain a remedial Commission of Delegates on his said appeals and complaint. Notwithstanding his constant endeavours he could not obtain any remedy. He is now able to satisfy the Queen that he was unjustly sentenced and desires redress.
ANNE.  425

1702.

Prays for a fresh Commission to some of the Bishops and Judges of the Common Law and Doctors of the Civil Law in England or Ireland to hear and determine his appeals and complaint.

10 June.  Pelham, Twisden and Others.

Grants under the Great Seal during lives have been anciently made of the office for making all writs of subpoena issuing out of the High Court of Chancery. The last of these [lives] is now in existence, and the last grantee was Sir Walter Vane, Kt. It was a grant of 28 Oct., 1672, for the lives of Sir William Twisden, Lionel Vane and Thomas Luddall; yet nevertheless the same was acknowledged in the trust of the petitioners or such other persons as they respectively claim under, in shares. Lionel Vane is the only life in being of these, but the office and profits have been continually renewed as the persons, or some of them, for whose lives the same were granted expired. All or most of your petitioners, or those for whom they are in trust, have, as usual in like cases, settled their respective interests of and in the said profits for benefit of themselves and children, on which many of them depend for their future subsistence.

They pray for a grant of the said office and profits for three other lives.

The petitioners are N. Pelham, W. Twisden, George Vane, Thomas Perkins, Thomas Twisden, N[?] Battersby, Oliver North and George Coles.

Same.  Anne Fitzharris.

She married the son of Sir Edward Fitzharris and brought 6,000l. into the family. His estate, of between 2,000l. and 3,000l. a year, was given away by the Government between his confinement and his trial. In compassion, King Charles II gave pensions to his family, and to the petitioner a pension of 240l. a year.

Since this reduction the House of Commons addressed his [late] Majesty in petitioner’s behalf, and the King complied with the address. The pension is in arrear, and petitioner in great want.

Prays for the quit-rents of Sir Edward Fitzharris’ estate, which are so unjustly kept from her.

Same.  Frances, widow of Captain William Stopford.

In the late troubles in Ireland, she was forced to fly with her family to England. A considerable estate which she had in Co. Carlow was laid waste by order of the Government, to prevent 1702. its being "a harbour for rapperees and Tories." Her stock there was used by the army and she lost 2,000l. She also lost her husband, who had paid 1,300l. for a company in the Royal Regiment of Guards, and did not enjoy it twelve months.

Prays for a place on the Irish establishment to enable her to escape debts and troubles.

10 June. Master and Wardens of the Pewterers' Company of London.

They are incorporated by letters patents of King Edward IV, and have considerable powers for controlling their mystery throughout England. Their patents were confirmed by several later Kings and by Kings Charles I and Charles II, who granted them further powers in England and Wales. They have used their powers well for preventing the deceitful making of pewter, and have thereby preserved it in its primitive goodness. They have expended more on this than the forfeitures amount to, and still want further powers and encouragement for better government.

They pray for further powers and a grant of half the forfeitures which come to the Crown for breaches of the Acts relating to the making of pewter.

William Sutton.

His petition shews that Nicholas West obtained a judgment against him in the King's Bench. Petitioner is advised that there is an obvious error in this judgment, but it cannot be mended save by the grant of a writ of error returnable in your Majesty's High Court of Parliament. Prays accordingly.

12 June. Martha Villers.

As relict of Sir Edward Villers, late Knight Marshal of England, she shews that her husband had 4,300l. due to him for services to the Crown and on other accounts. Petitioner paid away all she had in order to satisfy the debts which her husband left at his death. She has been very poor for seven years and is in danger of imprisonment. Prays for consideration.

Same. Sarah Bladen.

On 29 May she delivered a petition shewing that King William, in recognition of the loyal services of her family and of her losses during the late wars, granted her a pension of 50l. a year, payable by the Earl of Ranelagh here.

Prays for continuation of the pension.

William Weedon Ford, Warden of the Fleet [Prison].

His petition shews that Colonel Baldwin Leighton, in Feb. 1693, procured a commission to inquire into the forfeitures of the office of Warden of the Fleet, and, by inquisition taken thereon, the jury found that the prisoner had suffered a voluntary escape. In Michaelmas term, 1700, judgment was thereon given against petitioner on the evidence of one person only. There are manifest errors in the inquisition and judgment.

Prays for a grant of a writ of error returnable in Parliament.

John Stedwell (or Sledwell).

Was porter at Chatham yard, temp. Charles II, James II and King William and Queen Mary. He was put out of his post for no other offence than staying with King James II at Feversham, where his Majesty had no other servant than petitioner and Mr. Chilton. Petitioner also served Queen Anne and Queen Mary (when Princesses) by order of King James II (then Duke of York) during five summers at Richmond; is 75 years old and very poor.

Prays for restoration to his place of porter or other employment.

12 June, Whitehall. Ref. Commissioners of the Navy.—Ibid, pp. 11, 12.

16 June. Coga Baba de Sultanan (to Nottingham).

An Armenian merchant and subject of the King of Persia. On behalf of himself and several other Armenian merchants of the City of London, shews that he understood that by a late Act of Parliament the importation of raw silk from Italy and elsewhere was allowed. Almost all the silk trade is in the hands of the Armenians, who bring the silk through Muscovy to Holland. The import of silk direct from Persia would be of great benefit to the Queen’s subjects and the petitioners, if permitted, would import it direct, and would take English manufactures in exchange for the same.

Pray for leave to import silk to England from Persia by way of Archangel and Narva.

Charles Waite, Gentleman.

His grandfather was seised in fee simple of a messuage and divers lands in Market Overton and Barrow in Rutland, value about 100L a year. By a marriage settlement, dated 23 March, 13 Car. I, his grandfather settled the estate on himself for his life and his heirs by his wife Jane in tail male with reversion or remainder to his right heirs. About 1660 petitioner's grand-father was attainted of high treason, and his estate for life and his remainder or reversion expectant on the said entails vested in King Charles II, and is now in the Queen. Eighteen sons and grandsons of Thomas Waite are now alive, all inheritable in the said estates tail before the Queen’s reversion or remainder can take place, so the Queen’s interest is of little value.

Petitioner, desiring to pay his debts, contracted lately with a Mr. Edgeson for an absolute sale of the premises, but Edgeson’s counsel, in perusing the title, think that he cannot safely purchase by reason of the reversion or remainder in the Crown, whereby petitioner is like to be disabled from performing his contract, or raising moneys as he desires, without the Queen’s help.

Prays for a grant of the reversion or remainder in fee in her Majesty expectant upon the estates tail as aforesaid.

Their petition shews that in Nov., 1699, the petitioner [sic] intended a voyage to China with the said ship. The Master received money of the President and gentlemen who were to accompany him thither to buy fresh provisions for them and to pay seamen the river pay. Carrying money with him down the river for those purposes (500l. and 18 silver plates for the particular use of the said President), the money and plate were seized by a Custom House officer on the way to the Downs on the supposition that it was intended for transportation. The petitioner’s witnesses having gone to sea, a verdict was given against him [on a charge of attempting to transport], and the matter is now depending upon writ of error. Petitioner does not believe that your Majesty will take the plate and money merely because (for the reason aforesaid) it was not entered.

Prays for an order to the Attorney General to enter a noli prosequi on the said judgment, that the petitioner may have his plate &c. on paying the Customs officer’s reasonable charges.

18 June. John Nicolls, Gentleman.

His petition, delivered on behalf of many thousand inhabitants dwelling in and near Mount’s Bay in Cornwall, shews that petitioner’s ancestors were very great sufferers in the war with Spain, the enemy landing in the said bay and burning their churches, dwelling-houses, goods and merchandises. The towns of Penzance, Nulyn [Newlyn], Monsehole [Mousehole] and many adjacent houses were burnt by them.

They are now in greater danger than ever of being burnt, or fired upon by the enemy’s privateers. They have no means of defence. In the last French war your petitioners lay extremely exposed and had all their ships taken by the French privateers and saw them "often before their faces as riding at anchor in their very bay."

A small number of guns placed conveniently on the "clufts" between the said towns of Nulyn and Montsehole [Mousehole] would in good measure secure as well the said towns and the country adjacent from the insults of the enemy and secure the said bay and all the ships riding there, or which should come in there for refuge from the enemy's privateers, which are generally numerous in these parts. They would also be an advantage to trade generally.

They pray for a grant of the necessary guns and ammunition.

18 June. Charles Palmer.

Was formerly clerk of the Carriages to King Charles II. From 1660-1674 he was under-clerk for the accounts of the various offices under the jurisdiction of the Green Cloth, and was for years only [sole] clerk to Sir William Boreman, second clerk of the Green Cloth. In 1674 he was sworn and admitted clerk of the Carriages and held the same till 1685. [Details.] A new establishment being made about that time the office of the petitioner, though most useful on progresses and removals was "on the mean pretence of frugality . . . sunk," and the society of cartaker [sic] left without any head officer, to petitioner's ruin.

Petitioner is informed that your Majesty intends a new book of the establishment for your Majesty's household "from the ancient foot of your Majesty's predecessors."

Prays for re-appointment as clerk of the Carriages or for other employment in the Royal Household.

Followed by:

(1) Copy of Warrant from the Duke of Ormond to the Clerk of the Green Cloth in execution of the next.

Dated, 27 March, Clare[n]don House, 1674, setting out:

(2) Copy of Warrant from King Charles II to the Duke of Ormond as Lord Steward of the Household.

To admit Palmer as clerk of the Carriages and swear him in, invest him, &c.

Dated, 16 March, Whitehall, 1673-4.

(3) Further petition of Palmer:

Shews that he assisted in the improvement of the King's revenue, namely changing the Excise on coffee, tea, and chocolate into an additional duty on the dry goods payable at the Custom House. This was passed into an Act of Parliament over 13 years ago, and had in the first year resulted in an improvement in the revenue of over 23,000l. Petitioner and his partners early had the Royal promise of reward from the product of this tax, but he has not received any, and has thus lost over 300l. His services have been attested by eighteen members of Parliament, and 1702.

their attestation has often been laid before the late King "at sitting in the Treasury."

He prays for relief.

In 1695 he was called from his office of secretary to the Admiral of the Fleet, and, in conjunction with Mr. Bridgman, appointed Secretary of the Admiralty. He found at his arrival in England that those moderate fees which his predecessors had enjoyed had been taken away. For some time before the close of the late war, and to the time when his Royal Highness was appointed Lord High Admiral, he acted singly in that station without extra encouragement for his extraordinary care and pains in an employment of so great trust and consequence, but had to pay his taxes as if in receipt of a salary, which often reduced him to great necessity. By the late King’s order the Lords of the Treasury ordered the reimbursing of the principal officers and Commissioners of the Navy and other public officers for their public taxes paid from 1695.

Prays for reimbursement of what he has paid in public taxes since he came into his office, as per annexed account, and for a similar favour to his clerks whose fees are not adequate, but are their only support.

20 June, Whitehall. Ref. Lord High Treasurer.

Memorandum. An account was annexed of the taxes from 1695-7. It amounted to 517l. 10s. 0d.—Ibid, pp. 18-19.

Same. Martha Francis.

She shews, as the only surviving child of Sir Andrew Cogan, Bt., that her father loyally served Charles I, and in his service spent, or was plundered of 34,677l., which prevented him from making any provision for his family. King Charles II, on hearing her case, well remembered her father’s services, and she was thereupon relieved annually till 1688. She only received occasional relief in the time of the late King, and her pension is in arrear and she is in debt. Prays for continuance of her pension of 200l. a year and for arrears.

22 June. William Dockwra, of London.

He set up a penny post and regulated it at his own expense which has been a considerable gain to the revenue of the letter office and an eminent service to the public. He was deprived of the possession of the penny post, and, soon after the Revolution the House of Commons recommended his case to the King, whereupon he had a grant of 500l. a year for a term of years for support of himself and his numerous family. In 1697 he was appointed Comptroller of the penny post at 200l. per annum, but in 1702.

Midsummer, 1700, he was removed and his pension of 500l. a year expired at the same time, so as he has had neither office nor pension for almost these two years.

Prays in consideration of his losses in a matter in which the public have gained so much, to have some settled provision out of the penny post or otherwise, and a present support for his numerous family.

22 June. William, Bishop of Llandaff.

His petition shews that Llandaff is much the poorest see in England or Wales. Petitioner has held it for 23 years. His predecessor had the tenths of the diocese granted him for an additional support. Prays for a grant of these, and to be forgiven the arrears of tenths due to the Queen from him.

Same. Several Inhabitants of the City and Liberty of Westminster.

They have been almost ruined by giving credit to several "out gentiosers" [sic for gentlemen pensioners?] of Chelsea Hospital, who were in arrear of their subsistance. They cannot pay taxes, or give further credit, which will cause these persons to perish.

They pray for consideration that they may be kept from starving.

23 June. Colonel Henry Villiers.

In September, 1693, petitioner received an order from the Privy Council to take all care of the port and river of Tynne [Tyne] and the ships there according to his duty. In August, 1694, the Deputy Lieutenants and Justices of the Peace of the Bishopric of Durham and county of Northumberland complained to the Judges that they were afraid of their ships, which consisted sometimes of 600 sail, being burnt in the river. The Judges told them that the petitioner was the proper person to take care of them. In order thereto petitioner applied to the Master General of Ordnance and the Lords of the Admiralty for a guard-boat to attend the garrison. These thought it very necessary that petitioner should have one, and advised to apply to the Lords Justices as to who should furnish it. On 13 June, 1695, the Lords Justices agreed that the Paymaster of the Army (the Earl of Ranelagh) should provide what was necessary out of the contingencies of the Army, which he then did; but the said boat is gone to decay. In May last the town of Newcastle presented a petition to the Queen setting forth the danger in which the ships were in that harbour.

* See below in this Table at 30 June, 1702.

Fprays an order to the Earl of Raneflah to furnish petitioner with means to purchase a guard-boat sufficient to protect them.

24 June. Captain John Poyntz and Others.

Poyntz, Benjamin Woodroffe, D.D., Moses Stringer, physician and chymist, on behalf of themselves and their company, shew that the islands of Tobago in America are of dangerous consequence for harbouring her Majesty's enemies. In the late wars with France and Holland most of the Caribbee Islands were thereby much endangered and many ships sailing to and from Barbados and the rest of the said islands were taken by ships harbouring there. The petitioners and company have a joint right with the natives of the said islands by a grant from James, late Duke of Courland, made in 1681, but, by reason of wars with France and other obstructions, have been prevented from settling there. Captain Poyntz has made eleven voyages to Tobago and Trinidad and the seas thereabouts and thereby made several secret discoveries of rich earth mines and lapis-lazuli and also of pearls and ambergrease, by which vast wealth, to the extent of several hundred thousands of pounds, may come to the Queen and her subjects, if free trade be had with the natives. The "Emperor of the Caribbees" is very anxious for such a traffic, and accordingly treated with Captain Poyntz for it, that the petitioner and any merchants ready to join with them should carry on the trade by such vessels, of peace or war, as they are ready to fit out, and should oppose and subdue her Majesty's enemies. They are also anxious to devote several hundred thousand acres of land in Tobago, and a twentieth part of such purchases or acquisitions as they shall make "to such pious uses whereby the Gospel may be propagated among the Indians &c., when they shall have a free trade, and the poorer sort of her Majesty's subjects transporting themselves thither may be provided for."

Pray that not only the islands of Tobago, but also any other lands which they may purchase or acquire from the Indians may be annexed to the Realm of England, and that the Queen will accept of a fourth part of such secret discoveries of rich earth, mines, lapis-lazuli, pearl and ambergrease as they have made or may make. Pray also for incorporation, with power to raise a stock or stocks, fit out ships of war or trade without expense to the Crown, and that Prince George would "condescend to be Governor of the said company."

His petition, on behalf of the regiment formerly under his command, shews that in March, 1689-90, there were taken out of that regiment 30 men and horses to recruit the Earl of Oxford's regiment. They received these men, being under orders for Flanders, and by warrant from the late King, dated 18 January following, the petitioner was ordered to recruit his regiment with 30 troopers, which was done on 1 February following, the horses therefor being received from M. Auverquerc. The charge of those recruit horses and of the arms for the men are placed to the account of the petitioner's regiment, and although petitioner received the horses the 1st of February following, with the men, yet by reason the men were not mustered (the regiment being then in Ireland and they recruited there) no pay is allowed them till 1 June following, and, they being respited from the time they were detached, the charge for their whole pay for four months lies on petitioner and his and their captains; also the whole charge of their clothing and arms, as well as for the thirty horses so recruiting the Earl of Oxford's regiment. In 1690, the horses were delivered to your petitioner to recruit his regiment, then in Ireland; but fifty-two of them were lost at sea by a storm, and are also placed to the account of the regiment. On a petition presented to the late King for relief herein, it was referred to Charles Fox, Esq., upon whose report in April, 1693, the Treasury granted petitioner 10l. a horse for the thirty detached and the fifty-two lost at sea; but no warrant has, in pursuance of that grant, been as yet issued to Mr. Blathwayt. The regiment is respited 117l. 15s. for fifteen unmounted men for 157 days from 1 June, 1691, being about that time mustered, although they were part of the recruit horses for those that were lost at sea and came up to the regiment five days after the said muster, and were long before on the charge of the regiment, having received them in England. The regiment is likewise charged 1,200l. for recruit horses in 1692, and for their tents and arms 462l. 15s. 4d., though the regiment was broke and at the same time delivered in August that year into Colonel Wood's new regiment, Brigadier Windham's, the Duke of Schonburg's and the regiment late Colonel Godfry's.

Prays for a warrant taking off the said several charges and the several respites, that the accounts of the regiment may pass the Commissioners for stating the accounts of the Army before the time limited by Act of Parliament be expired.

25 June. Merchants and Others of Lowestoft.

They shew that their town is situated on the sea coast, where there is a roadstead convenient for ships of most burthen if the town were able to defend them with a few more cannon than it now has, and with ammunition, carriages, &c. The neighbouring town of Bakefield [details of its position] has no defences. They ask for four more guns with all things necessary. They have now only four eleven pounders which, with a little powder borrowed from Great Yarmouth fort, enabled them to beat off Wt. 3880. A 28
1702. a small privateer which recently dared to come into their south road to take some ships at anchor there and which was next day taken by H.M.S. Flamborough. The nearness of Dunkirk and Ostend and the daily appearance of privateers make them realise their danger. Pray for cannon as above. Loyal professions.

27 June. William Richardson.
He is very old and poor and has been under several commands. Prays to be admitted to Chelsea College or Windsor.

30 June. Out Gentlemen Pensioners of the Royal College at Chelsea.
By the established subsidy they were allowed 1s. 6d. a day for their long services in the late wars. For the last ten years they have been reduced to 12d. a day, and for four years and eight months last past many of them received nothing. They have been forced to live on credit a long time and can get no further credit. Many of them have been imprisoned and the others are in danger of being so, if not relieved, by reason of their great debts. Pray for relief.

Same. Richard, Earl of Rivers.
The late King, some time before his death, directed steps to be taken [details] for appointing petitioner Constable of Liverpool Castle, with the old fee of 6l. 13s. 4d. a year, butlerage and prizage. Owing to the late King’s sickness and death the warrant was not signed, and, on the petitioner applying to your Majesty, the matter was referred to the Attorney General, who has reported on it.
Prays for a new warrant to the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster to grant him the said offices for three lives or a term thought fit.

Same. Charles Townly.
He was unfortunately in France about the time of the late Revolution, and soon after the said Revolution returned into England and lived peaceably and quietly at home in England. Recites the provisions of the Act of 1697,* against corresponding with King James II or his adherents.

Proceeds: Petitioner could not get the licence required by the Act in time, and therefore left the country and lived in the Low Countries from that time till the date of the late Declaration of War. Not desiring to live in a hostile country, he removed thence. He has a very aged father at home, who laments his absence and wants his help. Prays for leave to return to England on giving security for his good behaviour.

2 July. Viscount Blessington.

He has a piece of ground in the city of Limerick which has for some time been made use of for a parade ground for that garrison, by which he is kept out of possession of it, though he has an undoubted right to it by patent. Prays for consideration for the time and for rent in the future, or for possession.

Same. Colonel Edward Taylor.

In the late rebellion he at his own charge raised and for some time maintained a regiment of foot and a troop of horse for the service of King Charles I, in whose service his father was killed and petitioner confined in the Fleet till the Restoration. In 1697 the Lords Justices in England expressed their appreciation of his services and ordered him an annuity of 2s. 6d. a day to be paid by the Earl of Ranelagh. King William confirmed this pension, but it is now in arrear 167l. 10s. He is 92 years old and has nothing to live on but the said pension and is so much in debt “that he dare not stir out but on Sundays,” by which confinement he is made sickly. Prays for an order for payment of an immediate debt of 60l. out of the arrears of his pension or for other relief.

6 July. Thomas Tudway.

Ever since the Reformation there have been three organists belonging to the Chapel Royal, to attend that duty by turns. The petitioner was bred up in that chapel, and had a promise in '82 from King Charles II that he should have the next place which fell vacant. This occurred when Mr. Purcell died in 1696; but his place has never been filled. Prays for it.

and was affirmed on a writ of error returnable in the Council Chamber, in which judgment he is advised that there is a manifest error, "and he noways relievable but by bringing a writ of error returnable in your Majesty's High Court of Parliament." Prays for grant of such a writ.

9 July. Mary Huntington.

9 July, St. James'.—The Queen read the Lord Lieutenant's report on this case and ordered it to be sent to the Lord High Treasurer with directions to give order accordingly.—Ibid, p. 34. Preceded by :

The Earl of Rochester (Lord Lieutenant of Ireland) to Nottingham.

On the petition of Mary Huntington referred to me,* I have to say that it appears by a copy of the rent roll of the agent of the late Bishop that the value of the see amounts to 1,038l. 3s. 2d. a year, payable quarterly at Lammas, All Saints, Candlemas and May. The Bishop died on 1 September, 1701, and was entitled to the quarter which fell due on 1 August, 1701, and there are three quarters' rent due on 1 May last to her Majesty. For the preservation of the mansion house some repairs have been done and paid for out of the mean profits of the see. I think the Queen may bestow one quarter's rent more on the petitioner in addition to the quarter which fell due during her husband's lifetime.

Dated, Cockpit, 5 June, 1702. Ibid, pp. 33, 34.

11 July. Francis Gronet.

In obedience to the Queen's command, he shews that he went to Switzerland and distributed the late Queen Mary's charity to the poor Vaudois, "and was very serviceable to them in their return into their country." The war being declared some time after, he promoted the recruits made in that country for the English army in Piedmont, and the French being masters of Savoy he found out a short way for the said recruits, which saved them a compass of above thirty leagues, which was both very expensive and afforded frequent opportunities to desert. "For all which the French envoy being very much incensed complained to the Canton of Berne, who thought themselves thereupon obliged to banish him." This is certified by letters of the late Lord Schonberg, General of the English troops in Piedmont, by a certificate of the English Resident in Switzerland and by a letter from the Duke of Savoy to the late King. All these letters were seen by Lord Secretary Nottingham. The last-mentioned letter from the Duke of Savoy was, in the late King's absence in Flanders, presented by the petitioner to the late Queen Mary, who granted to the petitioner's son the commission of a reformed captain. When the late King returned from Flanders he changed this commission into a pension of 5s. a day, and this pension was paid for some years, and the petitioner has done nothing to render himself unworthy to receive it. On the contrary, he has been constantly occupied in examining strangers who come from France, and particularly the Papists, who, according to the account he gave of them, were either relieved or discarded. He did such good service in this respect that the late King’s Secretary of State directed him to continue so doing. For these and other services the late King, having been anew informed of them, a few days before his death directed that petitioner should be paid a gratuity of 100l., and that his pension should be continued on the Irish list. It has not been paid.

Prays for a continuance of his pension.

In the course of a suit in Ireland, he has to prove a deed. Two of the witnesses to it are dead and the third, Edward Johnson, is in France and will incur the penalties of high treason if he returns without licence. Prays for a licence to Johnson to come over and give evidence.

Same. Mathew Aylmer.

He served many years as flag officer and Commissioner of the Navy. It being the Queen’s pleasure to remove him, he prays for a pension such as was given to Admiral Killigrew, Sir Ralph Delavall and others by the late King (and allowed now by H.M.). Large family.

Same. Anne Richbell.

Her late husband, Edward Richbell, was one of the late farmers of the Revenue in Ireland, and thereby lost above 20,000l. He was unable to dispose of any part of his estate for 14 years [details], and, so, obliged to contract great debts, and, at his death, left petitioner very poor with four children. The late King granted her 40l. a year [details], which is now 2½ years in arrear.

Prays for her arrears and further favour.

17 July. Colonel Toby Pureell, Governor of Dungannon Fort in Ireland.

issue male the title to the said land may be disputed by the Crown, "because in passing John Butler's decree in the Court of Claims soon after the Restoration as an innocent Papist there was a clause whereby the said estate reverted to the Crown after the determination of the said issue of John Butler." He has served the Crown for 33 years and commanded a regiment in the late war in Ireland, which he resigned for want of health. He incurred many expenses at Newry for drums, trumpets, memorialis and exchange of prisoners, and these were never repaid him. The estate is his only provision. Prays for a grant of the Crown's title to it.

21 July. Lieutenant-Colonel Jean Thomas Labarthe.

He was sent to the relief of Londonderry and served very well there, and that he did good service in other places in Ireland, even some months after the capitulation of Limerick.

After the sieges of Cork and Kinsale he was made Governor of Thurles, during which time his pay was 15s. a day [details], but he has never received anything but two instalments amounting in all to 30l. He has no pension, and lost one of 900l., which he had in Holland, by coming over with the late King. Prays for payment of two years' arrears.

He is of Wallworth in the county palatine of Durham, and shews that he made "a considerable discovery relating to the Popish conspiracy in King Charles II's time." He laid out much money in journeys and attendances and, in King James II's time, had to fly to Holland and there was compelled, for subsistence, to sell his estate at 1,500l. loss. Is now very poor owing to his efforts in the Protestant interest. Prays for employment either military or civil.

The petition annexed Mr. Jenison's information delivered at the bar of the House of Commons on 9 Nov., 1680, and printed by order of the House; likewise a letter to Lord Secretary Nottingham, dated 26 July, 1702, wherein, among other matters of the same purport, he desires a power to find out Mr. Cuffell, Mr. Ra. Jenison, Mr. Bloundell, Mr. N. N., &c., all Jesuits, whereby he might illustrate the matter of fact set forth in his information.—S.P. Dom., Entry Book 239, pp. 40, 41.

Same. William, Lord Mountjoy.

He has a lease under the Crown of the castle of Mountjoy and 300 acres of land at 30s. and has about 10 years of the lease to run. As he takes his title from it, he asks for a longer term, or for a freehold on such terms as the Queen thinks fit.

AUGUST, 1702.

1 Aug. Thomas Smallbone.
He is of Bockhampton in Berks, and shews that he was in 1687 made cornet of horse in the Earl of Plymouth's regiment and followed the late King James into France and Ireland, and was in his service till September, 1699, when, being wholly ignorant of the Act of 1697, he returned to England and has lived peaceably ever since. Prays for pardon.

5 Aug. Mary Mayhook.
Petitioner's husband sent for her to New England, whither she went. Soon after he was cast away whilst fishing, leaving her with child. Had no support there, so came home, and, on the way home, was captured by the French, who took all she had from her. Recaptured by the Weymouth within 24 hours, but could not get back the linen which she had prepared for her lying-in. Was put ashore at Plymouth and came, in great poverty, to London. Soon after had a son. Prays for relief.
5 August, Whitehall. Ref. Dr. Brampton, Surrogate to the Judge of the Admiralty. He is to consider it, and, if the facts be true, to relieve petitioner.—Ibid, pp. 27, 28.

Same. Town of Whitehaven.
The masters and owners of ships, and the inhabitants, of the town of Whitehaven shew that their port lies open to the sea and has only a small platform without guns for its defence. The harbour is usually full of ships, and these are in danger of being destroyed upon the least attempt of an enemy, "the rather for that they lie dry at low water and are close moored one by another." If any such thing should happen it would ruin petitioners and the local trade, and also greatly prejudice the city of Dublin and the Customs. If they were supplied with ten demi-culverins or 12-pounders with carriages to plant on the same platform and other stores in proportion they hope that they might be able to make a good defence.
They pray for such great guns and stores as the Queen thinks fit.

His father, Captain Richard Farley, served in the Foot Guards in Ireland for about 30 years, till the Earl of Tyrconnell took away his commission because he was a Protestant, and afterwards he was despoiled by the Irish Papists of all he had.
In consideration of his services the late King and Queen granted petitioner's father a pension of 5s. a day. This was paid till his death in 1700.

Petitioner's brother, John Farley, was captain of Grenadiers and was killed at Limerick; and petitioner has been a lieutenant for 12 years, but, by an unhappy fall has been lately incapacitated for service. Prays for a civil employment in England or Ireland, and, in the meantime, for the same pension as his father had.

10 Aug. Thomas, Earl of Limerick.

He was bred a soldier and arrived to be colonel of the Irish regiment in France, which was worth to him 4,000 l. a year. By command of King Charles II he left that employment to enter the English service, and King Charles settled on him a pension of 500 l. a year. This he duly received till the late Revolution. Whilst he was Governor of New York, he exhausted his whole fortune in making war against the French in Canada, for which he has been paid nothing. [Details.] The estate of his late brother in Ireland is clogged with a large jointure to his widow and with many incumbrances left by him upon it. Parliament has charged it with great sums to Protestant purchasers and has cut off all arrears incurred since his brother's death, which will render the estate of little or no value to petitioner.

Prays for the arrears of his pension only.

Same. Mary Macarthy.

Her late husband, Colonel Macarthy, had a pension of 100 l. a year, which was punctually paid till the late Revolution. The Earl of Marlborough received him into protection when General in Ireland before the reduction of Kinsale. She had a promise of provision, but has received nothing and is very poor. Prays for her husband's pension to be continued.

Same. Willamena Bunce.

She shews that she is the only surviving issue of Sir John Bunce, Baronet, deceased. Her grandfather spent great sums on the Restoration of King Charles II when both King Charles II and King James II were in Holland. 15,000 l. of this sum was petitioner's mother's portion. In consideration of his zeal, as is well known to Colonel Titus, yet alive, and Sir Stephen Fox, King Charles II granted to him [petitioner's grandfather] a Privy Seal for 5,000 l. and, until payment thereof, an annuity of 200 l. The Privy Seal was not paid, and the pension continued to be paid to petitioner's father and, after his death, to her mother during the reigns of King Charles II and King James II. After her mother's death King William III continued the pension to 22 Aug. Thomas Hewston, Esq.

He shews that for several years he served as captain of horse, foot and dragoons till he was discharged of his employment by the Earl of Tyrconnell. Soon after he went to sea and, at the time of the Revolution, happened to have the chance of preserving several of her Majesty’s plantations in America, as appears in the annexed certificates. To do this he was obliged to fight with six French men-of-war under the command of
M. Duras [Du Casse], by which action he relieved the forces of Barbados and the Leeward Islands when reduced to the last extremity, and took from the French the island of Mary Gallant, blew up their forts, burst their heavy guns and brought those that were portable to Antego [Antigua], and delivered them, to the General for the use of the Crown. Petitioner was at great expense in raising a regiment for the defence of those islands and the furnishing them and the Governments of Barbados and Bermudas with ammunition and arms, of which they had none.
Some time later, by order of the Earl of Insiquin [Inchiquin], he landed on the island of Hispaniola, where he fought and defeated the French, though treble his number, and thereby prevented their designs on Jamaica.

Prays that the facts stated and the amount of his losses may be inquired into, and that he may have some post of importance and danger.

The petition annexed a certificate from the gentry and merchants interested in trading to the Leeward Islands in recommandation of Mr. "Hewston," and also letters from the Councils of Antegoa and Nevis.

It is absolutely necessary for the Queen’s service and the safety of her subjects in Pennsylvania that the Deputy Governor, Colonel Hamilton, should have at least a temporary approbation, otherwise, as petitioner here cannot obey her commands there, so his Deputy cannot safely execute them. Begs that Hamilton may be approved for one year and that the imputations against him be referred to Lord Cornbury [to see] whether he is worthy of being continued in his trust.

She is grandchild to Sir Thomas Edmonds, knight, deceased, formerly Treasury of the King's Household, Privy Councillor and Lord Ambassador in France, and shews that King Charles II, in consideration of a debt of 3,600l., and her father's great sufferings, settled a pension of 40l. a year on her in 1682, which she received all her reign and during all those of King James II and King William III, till within these two or three years; by reason whereof and of a long sickness she is reduced to inexpressible straits. She pray for continuance of her pension for her support, having no other subsistence.

They have lately received advices from India from several of their factories and commanders of their ships there that those seas have become very dangerous and are infested with pirates. These pirates have plundered both Europeans and Indians, and the Indians on the order of the Great Mogul, have, to make good their losses, sized the petitioners' servants and imprisoned them at Suratt, and seized their property and plundered their warehouses to a very great value, and also demand a great sum of money to make up for these losses.

The Mogul demanded from the Companies security for making good these losses, and, because the Ambassador refused to sign a paper to that effect, he was detained at Brampore in order to compel the petitioners to submit to these unreasonable demands. The Mogul’s troops have come down before Fort St. George and Fort St. David’s and threaten to ruin all the Companies’ factories in his dominion. The petitioners are also advised “the Arabs of Muscat are of late years grown very insolent and without any reason have seized several ships belonging to the English to a great value, and have sold the masters and mariners, who are your Majesty’s subjects, into perpetual slavery and have joined themselves to the subjects of the Mogul with whom they were before at variance,” in order further to spoil your Majesty’s subjects; and threaten to ruin their trade in those parts.

They pray that ships be sent to India forthwith to protect their interests and suppress the pirates.

Sir William Hodges’ Memorial.*

On behalf of a Spanish ship, whose Martin de Sansenea was commander, was taken on 26 August by the Dutch privateers, who sold her to the said Sansenea for 25,000 guilders; for security of which three Spaniards of that ship’s company remained on board the Dutch. On the 29th of the same the said ship and cargo was taken by her Majesty’s ship Monke, from which she was separated by bad weather, and afterwards taken by the French, who carried her into St. Ialo. He asks that the Spaniards who belonged to this ship, and who are now in prison at Southampton, may be released and their papers restored, that they may return to their country if the Spanish ship detained at Plymouth and now released by command or otherwise.

of the trade, namely of one Thomas Noxton," who, preferring his own private interest to the public gain, has brought an action of 22l. in the Court of Common Pleas against each of the petitioners in the Queen's name and his own under an old statute partly repealed. In a similar action brought in the Michaelmas term against some poor French bakers in the Queen's Bench, the Judges thought fit to suspend judgment till the opinion of all the judges was taken as to whether such Acts were intended against poor strangers at such a time as this. Pray, to save them from ruin, for a Noli prosequi in this action.

14 Nov. Tanners of Bermondsey.

The tanners in the parish of St. Mary Magdalene, Bermondsey, and within 30 miles of the same, shew that "leather is one of the staples of England and that the trade of a tanner is a very ancient trade and there be many good laws for the well tanning of leather; yet nevertheless of late years several persons never bred up in the said trade, and being very unskilful therein, do yet notwithstanding take upon them, especially in the said parish of Bermondsey and thirty miles distance from the same, to follow the said trade, whereby the good laws are subverted and the people abused and the tanners who are bred up in the use and exercise of the said trade much discouraged." Some of the petitioners have endeavoured to stop these evils, but are no longer able, unless they are incorporated, to prevent them.

They pray for the incorporation of "all such persons as are or shall be tanners duly qualified by law to use and exercise the art or mystery of tanning within the said parish &c., by the name or the Master, Wardens and Commonalty of the Art or Mystery of the Tanners of St. Mary Magdalene, Bermondsey, in the county of Surrey, and within 30 miles distance from the said parish," with the liberties and privileges mentioned in the accompanying paper of heads, or otherwise.

Note.—The petition was signed by the Dean of Canterbury, some prebendaries and other eminent hands.

27 Nov. Sir John Parsons and Partners, undertakers for insuring houses against damages by fire.

By patents dated 18 February, 4 James II, petitioners “as the first inventors thereof” obtained leave and license to proceed for 31 years in their undertakings for insuring houses against damages by fire, with a prohibition to all others to do so during that time, save only to the undertakers for such like insurances called the Friendly Society a liberty to do so under certain conditions and at certain times. In consideration thereof petitioners agreed with King James II and his heirs &c., to pay 60l. a year, during the life of their grant, to such of the gunners and other servants of the office of Ordnance as should assist petitioners in extinguishing fires; and have paid it.

Since the date of the patents the Friendly Society have made assurances contrary to the conditions of the same, and other Societies and persons have done the like, in violation of petitioners’ rights and without contributing anything to the said gunners.

Petitioners are advised by counsel that they cannot restrain these proceedings and that their patent is void ab initio.

Therefore, and as they have not since the last payment required any assistance from the gunners (having many servants constantly employed in that service), they pray that a surrender of their patents may be accepted.

28 Nov. Wynne, Houblon and Company.*

The patentees of the “seacrab engines” have lately had great proof of their efficiency in breaking up ships and recovering goods, guns &c., in any reasonable depth of water. On the first news of the glorious success at Vigo they proposed to his Royal Highness to send their engines there with a vessel proper for working them in order to have attempted the taking up of what treasure, guns, &c. were sunk. The return of the fleet seems for the time to have put an end to that proposal. Knowing however, how useful their engines might have been had they been at Vigo, they inform the Queen that they have them and offer to use them in her service.

* Called in the margin “a representation.”
Peter Shakerley and others.

Shakerley, William Clayton and Thomas Johnson, on behalf of several merchants trading to Virginia and Maryland, say that they have heard that some merchants, for their private advantage, have asked the Queen to forbid any ships to go to those plantations before next July and that the Governors of those plantations be authorised to lay an embargo on all such ships as shall not be ready to sail from such plantations on 25 March next. If this be done petitioners think it will much damage the Queen’s revenue and the export of the woollen, linen and other manufactures of England. Reasons follow.

Pray for convoys for any of the said ships leaving for the said plantations in March next and for leave for all the said ships to sail from thence in June next, which are more suitable times than those proposed by the other merchants.

Followed by:—

Reasons annexed to the foregoing petition.

If merchant ships go out in July they will begin engaging in May, which is the time when her Majesty’s officers desire to impress men for the fleet. As the merchants give higher wages than her Majesty’s pay (often nigh double), many men will, in such case, desert the Navy for service on the merchantmen. Others will “lurk” and keep out of the way in the hope of being able to engage in the merchant service. If the merchant ships go in July they will be in Virginia at the end of August and September. These are known to be the most sickly months, and the worm is sometimes in September as destructive as at any other time.

It is inconvenient for the ships to start from Virginia in April, for, the frosts commonly lasting from December to the end of February or the middle of March, the planters cannot then strip or pack their tobacco. In the month of March there are always dry north-west winds and the rivers are frozen up so that no sloops or boats can go to work in fitting tobacco aboard the ships which was [sic] ready before frost set in. The fleet therefore could not be ready to set sail in April.

“That it is the most improper month for a fleet to sail out of the country by reason the air then begins to be warm and the fogs fall in with small rains, which prepares the tobacco for stripping and packing that was so dry some months before that it could not be handled.” Stripping of tobacco in winter occasions great damage and hazard. [Details.] The end of May or June is the best time for the merchant ships to set out from Virginia. If much tobacco is left in the West Indies its price will fall so low that it will not be worth cultivating, and the planters will betake themselves to raising sheep, hemp and flax and to grow corn for supply of the West Indies and Madeira Islands, as they have formerly done. This would lessen our woollen and other manufactures at home and prejudice the shipping trade.—S.P. Dom., Entry Book 240, pp. 40–43.

30 Nov. John Colson, of Winchester.

Served in the Earl of Oxford's troop of Guards as a trooper for twelve years, until in 1701 "by reason of several wounds and bruises which happened to him at the Boyn in Flanders*" he became unfit for service. Is very poor.

Prays for an almsman's place in the Cathedral Church of Winchester.

Also note of recommendation of petitioner by the Dean and Prebendaries of Winchester.

DECEMBER, 1702.

1 Dec. The Inhabitants of Carbonear, in the Bay of Conception, in Newfoundland.

They are in daily fear of the neighbouring French and those of Canady, who are near them. In the late war they were attacked by the French and their property and dwellings destroyed. Nevertheless they betook themselves to an island and there defended themselves against their enemies. They have bought guns and ammunition for defending themselves in one of the islands, but have had to leave many of their goods behind them, as Captain William Caldwell can certify.—Pray for protection of their harbour to be considered.

2 Dec. Elizabeth Gillam.

Prays for a pardon for her brother, Robert Bowsher, who twelve years ago killed John Barry, a foreigner and servant of the Trumpeter. Bowsher was very drunk at the time [details] and is a respectable man and went to church on week days as well as Sundays. He had no malice against the man he killed and petitioner paid for his burial. Details.

2 December, Whitehall. The Attorney or Solicitor General to consider and report whether Bowsher's outlawry for murder should be reversed and he pardoned.—Ibid, p. 49.

6 Dec. Hoogan Swansden.

By violent prosecution of his wife and her relations, he is convicted for forcibly marrying her (she being an heiress), against her will, whereas he had her full and free consent, "but the petitioner's witnesses being kept out of Court by violence that could prove the same,"... he was found guilty before the Court of Queen's Bench. And in regard his wife in her evidence against the petitioner did deny her consent, and in her evidence against Sarah Boynton did tacitly and almost plainly confess it.

He prays for time till the Queen considers the case or for time to make his peace with God.

He is one of those who imported wines from San Sebastian's in 1700. These were admitted to composition by the then Lords of the Treasury, they having paid in all above 3,000l. Petitioner paid for his share in one ship 2,900l.

Some time afterwards the Attorney General brought other informations against the petitioner and the other wine merchants for the like sort of wines coming into their hands in 1699. The petitioner was tried first and a verdict was obtained against him for 1,690l. and a judgment was entered thereon. Petitioner and the rest of the wine merchants begged the then Lords of the Treasury that process might be stopped, they having understood that the fine previously imposed covered all offences committed up to the time of its imposition. Their lordships, however, amerced the wine merchants, for the wine imported in 1699, 4l. per tun. To this all the importers, and your petitioner, submitted.

The Commissioners of Customs, though inclined to relieve petitioner, say they cannot admit him to pay 4l. a tun, as judgment* has been obtained and entered against him, and he cannot, therefore, be relieved by law.

Prays that the matter may be referred to the Attorney General for his opinion and report whether the said judgment may be discharged by law and that, if it may, he be directed to acknowledge satisfaction on the record, petitioner first paying 4l. a tun as other merchants have done for the like offence, and the charges of the Customs; and for further or other relief.

King [Charles] I, by patents dated 8 June, 1642, granted to Elias Midhope and his heirs a market to be held on every Tuesday and a fair for three days yearly on the vigil, day and morrow of St. Barnaby the Ax [Apostle] within the manor of Penningsall, now called Pennyston, in Yorkshire. Petitioner is now seised to him and his heirs of this manor. The fair and market have not been held for many years, to the great prejudice of the local inhabitants and the counties adjoining; and their continuance will be no damage to the Queen or any of her subjects. About 28 October, 1699, petitioner applied to King William III for a regrant, and the then Attorney General recommended, after a writ of ad quoddam damnum had issued and been returned [details as to inquiry by sheriff &c.] that the regrant might be made. The petition, reference and report are lost, but the return and the writ remain filed in the Court of Chancery, and a true copy of the petition, reference and report are entered in the then Attorney General's books. Prays for a regrant—the market to be held on Thursdays and the fair on 10, 11 and 12 June, for selling and buying of cattle, corn, and other goods in the manor and town of Pennyston.

Bakewell is a very large parish and its endowments only 40l. a year. It is too big for one man to manage, and petitioner is anxious to annex to it certain lands at Taddington, in Bakewell, held of the manor of High Peak, and worth only 24l. a year. Prays for a licence in mortmain to authorise this annexation and that of other lands not exceeding 60l. a year in value.

Same. John Evans.

He served the late King in his naval force as commander in post from 10 July, 1691, to the end of the last war. He was then recalled from New York, in which province he had attended five years till the arrival of the Earl of Bellomont as Governor, who conceived a prejudice against petitioner, and committed some unwarrantable actions against him for bringing home his predecessor without his [the Earl's] leave. The Earl laid several false informations against the petitioner before the late King, who, without hearing the petitioner, ordered the Lords of the Admiralty not to employ him. Petitioner went then into the East India Company's service, and, returning [from the East], found the throne filled to his great satisfaction. He applied for employment, and was told that the late King's order was an obstacle to him.

Prays that he "may be heard to" the Earl of Bellomont's charges and that, being acquitted of these, he may be [held] qualified to serve the Queen.

It will be a great benefit to the city of London and an accommodation to the county of Sussex and not to the prejudice of the Queen, or any of her subjects, if her Majesty will grant a monthly market to the petitioner for the sale of live cattle to be held at East Grinstead, which lies within the said county in the road to London. Prays for such a grant, the market to be held on the first Wednesday of every month.

Carter, who is first lieutenant on her Majesty's ship Grafton, has been thirty years in the Navy. In 1690 he was commissioned a 2nd lieutenant of the Duchess, and was in active service all last summer, and for some time had command of a French prize, Le Firme, of 70 guns, taken at Vigo. Whilst in command of her (for six days pending the appointment of a captain) he had great trouble with the seamen, who were running about her with lights. Had he not been very watchful, she might have been burnt after her capture. Petitioner was also at the late expedition to Cadiz, and was four days and nights in active service getting the men and horses across the two rivers, with very little food. Owing to exposure there he has had his sight and hearing impaired and has such dizziness in his head that he is unfit for further service. He prays for superannuation for which Sir C. Shovell recommended him.

19 December, Whitehall. Ref. to the Prince's Council, who shall report to him on it. His Royal Highness may then make such provision for the petitioner as he thinks fit.—S.P. Dom., Entry Book 240, pp. 47, 48.

William Sharpe.

He served on several British ships during the late war and especially on board the Assistance, under command of Captain Phiney Bowles, wherein he lost his left leg in 1694. He sends certificates [details] of his service and good behaviour. He has been very ill, and he and his family are reduced to poverty. Prays for the next vacant almsman's place in the cathedral at Oxford.

Was servant to King Charles II as scourer of the side kitchen and doorkeeper of the Queen's privy kitchen. Has now no employment. Wife and four children. Very poor. Asks for a pension.

Also note by Sir Stephen Fox certifying that Benning was employed as alleged, with details.

24 Dec. Margaret Moss, widow.

Her husband was killed in service at Limerick and left five small children. Very poor. Late King granted her 20l. a year pension in England. As this was her only living she had to live in Ireland the better to procure food for herself and poor family out of her small allowance. Prays for continuance of her former pension and that it be paid out of the Irish revenue.

TABLE IX.

Scottish Warrants and Commissions.

These are entries of Royal Warrants to the Lord Chancellor and Privy Council of Scotland, or to the Lord Chancellor alone, or to the Lord Chancellor and Commissioners of the Treasury of Scotland, or some other high officers in Scotland, conveying the Royal Orders in various matters. Sometimes the warrant and the docquet thereof are both entered, sometimes the warrant alone and sometimes the docquet alone. Where the warrant or warrant and docquet are entered the fact is not repeated; but where the docquet alone is entered this is shewn to the reader by the insertion of the word "Docquet" at the head of the entry. All the entries are from S.P. Scotland, Warrant Book 18; so this fact is not repeated, but reference to the page alone is made. This book contains also several lists of Commissions in Scottish regiments, which are placed with the other Scotch warrants. The Table also contains a few Royal letters addressed directly to particular persons and not framed in the form of warrants. These are entered in this table as "Royal letters" or simply as "The Queen to" &c.

The first few Scottish letters or warrants are placed in the body of the Calendar [see above pp. 1-3, 10, 13, 15], as they are of special importance and afford the reader an example of the kind of letter which was sent to Scotland at this date; but later all Scottish warrants, except a few of special importance which do not lend themselves to tabular treatment, are reserved for this table at the end of the year. When the docquet only is entered, it does not shew to whom the full warrant was addressed: but warrants for the Great Seal would properly be addressed to the Chancellor as Keeper thereof. Unless otherwise stated all the documents are dated from St. James'.

We have considered the report of the state of the arms and ammunition, forts and magazines transmitted by you in obedience to the order of King William III. Chancellor and Chancery.

The office of Lord High Treasurer is now in Commission. An Act of Parliament provides that the number of officers of State who are to have place in Parliament should not exceed the number of eight, even though at same time, more than eight persons may be employed in the execution of the said office. Orders patents to be prepared &c. appointing the Duke of Queensberry, one of the Secretaries of State for Scotland, "co-principal and co-junct" with Lord Secretary Seafield. He has stopped liberty of commerce and declared the pretended Prince of Wales to be King of England, Scotland and Ireland and has "influenced Spain to concur with him in this indignity."

He prays that he may have the benefit of the prescribed rules, or be recommended to Parliament for legal redress, and, in the meantime, for stay of further execution.

Royal Letters† in favour of James Mackenzie.

Besides the ordinary clerks of the Exchequer and the Keeper of the Register of Signatures in Scotland, there has always been a clerk appointed for serving her Majesty's Treasury or Commissioners of Treasury and for keeping their records and warrants and clearing of their accounts. This office is now held by Sir Thomas Moncreife, one of the principal clerks of the Exchequer, who, by reason of his age, wants to have some one joined with him in his office. The Queen is pleased (with the advice and consent of the Commissioners of the Treasury and of the Commissioners of the Exchequer in Scotland) to appoint James Mackenzie, son of Viscount Tarbat, to hold the place jointly with Moncreife. They shall receive the usual fees jointly and the longer liver of them shall have the office alone. Favourable clauses. Privy Seal. Pp. 135–6.

† The entries which I style "Royal Letters" are not (as entered) directed to anybody and generally contain no words of warranty; so I cannot call them as "Royal Warrants." The latter, as the text shows, are directed to some official or officials and have always words of warranty at the end. But even the "Royal Letters" are called "Warrants" in the docquets or short abstracts, which, in many cases, are added at the end of the entry.—Ed.

12 May.  Lyon King of Arms.

Sir Archibald Primerose, of Carington, Knight and Baronet, was clerk to the Council Register and Rolls of Scotland, temp. Charles II, and was by King Charles made Lord Justice General of Scotland. In testimony of his services there was assigned to him, in addition to his paternal coat of arms, a double treasure flowered and counterflowered with flowers-de-lis as in the Royal Arms of Scotland, as appears by a warrant of his arms under the hand of Sir Charles Areskine of Cambo, sometime Lyon King of Arms. King William conferred a Viscountcy on Sir Archibald's son, for his encouragement. The warrant to carry the double treasure has, we are informed, "fallen aside so as it cannot be found," and Lyon is not "in freedom or use" of confirming such privileges unless a warrant is produced to him. We approve and renew the warrant granted temp. Charles II, and authorise Lyon to "matriculate" the same in the registers of his office and to give proper extracts therefrom to all persons concerned. Royal Letters in favour of Patrick Thomson of Dininno.

The Queen is informed that Thomson, who killed John Adamson, servant to ————, did so without any premeditation and upon great provocation. There had been a quarrel between them, but others in the company had appeased it, when Adamson, in fury, thinking his master had been affronted, attacked Thomson with a "Kain," and Thomson was forced, in self-defence, to draw his sword. Thomson has obtained "letters of slaines" from the two brothers and nearest of kin of the deceased, who, for themselves and their kindred, express Thomson's peaceable disposition, and discharge him for their part. A letter of remission is to be passed under the Great Seal of Scotland pardoning Thomson. Clauses for execution. The pardon to be read most favourably. Pp. 138, 139.

Chancellor and Commissioners of the Treasury.

Sir Alexander Bruce has represented to us his losses incurred in 1693 and 1694, when he foraged the troop of Guards who were in Edinburgh in time of Parliament, and foraged the troops then in Scotland on English pay. These things he did by order of the Government, outside his contract, and on assurance of repayment by the then Lords of the Treasury. He has not yet been paid.

Examine and report on his accounts, and say out of which fund he may best be paid, and meantime take no steps to recover the 1,600l. found due from him to us for his intromissions with the funds of the aforesaid two years. P. 139.

A PROJECT for an AGREEMENT with the SWISS PROTESTANTS.

Shewing how an ambassador or envoy may happily succeed in his negociation among the Switzers and their confederates, the Grisons, the Valesians, the Turgovinians, the Rhinedalians &c.; and how to cross the French, Spanish and Bavarian faction there, which is kept alive by M. Puisieux at Saleure and M. Granville amongst the Grisons, both being the French King’s envoys here, humbly offered to her Majesty by N.N.:—

Right Honble.—Every Protestant should promote the cause of the State in which he dwells. This being so, I hope your honour will commend me “for what I am going humbly to lay into the bosom of your honour’s prudence and secrecy.”

1. The best way to thwart French designs in Switzerland would be to maintain a more intimate correspondence with “all the laudable cantons of Switzerland in general and their confederates the Grisons, the Turgovians, the Rhinedalians, the Toggenburgians, the Wallesians &c., but especially with the Protestant cantons of Zurich, Bern, Basil and Scaffhausen, who have the greatest interest among them.”

2. A pretty good beginning of such an intimacy was made in the late reign; and an Envoy sent thither, but he did little good. Of late another Envoy has been sent.

3. The canton of Zurich is the “prime of all the cantons,” and has the sole prerogative above all others to receive Ambassadors and Envoys and let them reside there; but each canton is an independent republic.

4. “If an envoy be sent to a King or Prince that envoy hath nothing to do but fairly to insinuate himself with some of the chief ministers of that Prince’s Court. But where there is a body of so many distinct heads as the Helvetick Body with their confederates (some of the cantons being aristocratical and some democratical) there it requireth more than an ordinary labour, sagacity, skill and prudence to work successfully in his negociation; which the French King wisely considering, he doth not only keep a perpetual ambassador there residing at Saleure (Solothurn), one of the Popish cantons, but several under agents or secretaries whom M. Puisieux, the French ambassador
(according to his master's directions), sendeth up and down in Switzerland to encourage the Switzers (as near as he can) in general, and their confederates, to side with the French faction; and to that purpose Monsieur Puisieux doth not only employ the French King's own subjects as his secretaries or under-agents, but he picketh out (as his predecessor M. Amelat did before him) with his master's money such Popish Switzers as are fit tools to advance his master's interest."

5. Puisieux sends these under-agents here and there to reside and spy out matters and bribe persons for his master's service and generally to promote the French interest, but especially among the Grisons, the Wallesians and the petty cantons.

6. Now to countermine them we must do as they do, and keep some secretaries and under-agents there, especially among the Grisons and Wallesians. This might be done for a tolerable easy charge, because these countries join Piedmont, Tyrol, the Milanese &c., "and I must needs be sensible that if there had been a prudent agent (on her Majesty's behalf) in the country of Wallis alias Valesia [Valais], the said Wallesians jointly with the Swiss cantons would not have permitted the French army to enter into and to take possession of the county of Augst alias Aosta and to cut off on that side the communication between the Duke of Savoy and the laudable cantons &c."

7. "And if prudent measures were taken, that would do a vast kindness to her Majesty's pious designs in sending relief to the poor distressed Camisars in the Cevennes and to keep up her interest in Italy; and I need not question in the least but the Protestant Switzers and Grisons would not only connive at but give leave to her Majesty's troops to pass through their respective territories for Italy and the Cevennes." They would even either raise troops of their own or "give leave by way of connivance" to anyone that had a mind voluntarily to list and join themselves with her Majesty's troops; "and that would be the chief means (according to my certain apprehension) to reduce France to reason in the very heart of France and to break all her measures" in a very short time.

8. The Protestant party being the stronger in the Grisons, such a policy would outweigh the French and would incline even the Papists (if things were handsomely managed) to leave the French, and side for the Queen's and her allies' interest.

I must now tell your honour of the Government of the chief laudable cantons, "I mean those that are aristocratical (for the democratical cantons are but inconsiderable in comparison to them)," that your honour may know how best to remedy any errors committed by any English envoy "that is not acquainted with the peculiar maxims of those Helvetic Republicans":—

1. Each of the cantons of Zurich, Bern, Basil and Schaffhousen has a Senate of its own which has full legislative power. Each Senate is divided into two Houses called the Major and Minor Senate; but they meet generally, as occasion arises, in the same house.

2. Now if an envoy... will act with good success there, he must not stay till the whole Diet of the Helvetick Body be met at Baden, which is but seldom, to make a smooth harangue of compliment to them on her Majesty's behalf; but he must (as the French do) make fair way for it beforehand; for in this case it is certainly true that Quod omnibus dicitur nemini dicitur."

3. He must insinuate himself with the Consuls, Pro-Consuls, Senators and Tribunes of Zurich, Berne &c. as well as with the Commons "to drive the nail wisely to some purpose before they have their general meeting at Baden &c."

4. "He must not imagine that this or that particular lord or gentleman (as a few ministers of a monarch) belonging to the respective Senates, can turn the scale without the help of others; for the best man there hath but his vote (and no more than his vote), whether it be in any of their Major or Minor Senates; but if things be well managed beforehand so that they be ripe for the General Diet, then they (these worthy gentlemen) will lead and inspire one another."

5. An envoy must often visit them that are the head-rulers and keep them company in order to discover their minds. The French envoys and their agents do not think it beneath their character to do this.

6. "Such an envoy should live somewhat genteelly and not grudge (now and then) to regale some of the chief lords and gentlemen with a supper or dinner, to drink (according to their custom) her Majesty's health.

7. "It should be a man of an estate or, if not, one that should be of that noble English spirit as to be more concerned to promote her sacred Majesty's (and the English nation's) honour and interest than to sacrifice to his own nett."

8. He should have "an under-agent or secretary of great dexterity and prudence," to copy out letters and "to visit, now and then, the other cantons (where the envoy cannot conveniently be himself) to make and keep up friends on her Majesty's side, that when their General Diet meets at Baden they may outvote the French and Spanish faction there."

9. It should be one who would shew himself a "downright zealous Protestant of the Church of England, for which the Protestant cantons have a hearty veneration. Nay, I can testify that no nation under Heaven hath a more intimate love for the Protestant English than they."

10. The Queen's envoy at Zurich should also have a constant communication with the Most Revd. Antistes and the other prime clergy there, who are regarded there as the bishops are with us, "because they have much to say (both in the pulpit and elsewhere) and bear a great sway in things relating to the public welfare of that nation." If things go amiss in the Senate, they have the privilege of petitioning the Senate "for amendment of visible errors; and if the Senate does not regard their petition they have absolute liberty to insist upon it in the pulpit, before God and men,"
11. I know the temper of the Protestant Switzers (especially those that are patricians) so well that I dare assure your honour that they never will nor can have a good opinion of an English envoy unless he shews himself not only a pious, good moralist, that concerns himself as a politician for the good of his Prince, but also a real Protestant Christian that taketh to heart the interest of the Church of God and of that holy religion whereof our most gracious Queen is (as most justly she deserveth the glorious title of) the Nursing Mother and Defender of our Faith."

An Addition to the Project.

The Ambassador or Envoy residing at Zurich must have such a Protestant chaplain of the Church of England as understands the language of the country as well as French and English that he may converse with the prime reverend clergy there and "keep up that sacred correspondence which was between the Church of Zurich and that of England in the time of King Edward, Queen Elizabeth and King James I." This was happily renewed of late by the efforts of Mr. N.N., the author of the Project, between the most reverend Antistes of Zurich and the late Archbishop Tillotson, the late Bishop Barlow of Lincoln, the present Bishop of London, who, besides several other persons of honour and quality, can speak of Mr. N.N.'s efforts for the Church, his writings &c. N.N. can also shew how in the late reign he was sent over by the Senate of Zurich and on behalf of the "prime reverend clergy there with Sir Jean Rodolph Escher as his a latere" in the name of the laudable Protestant cantons to congratulate their Majesties on the late happy revolution and shew their zeal for a Protestant succession in England, and how they performed their mission at their own charges. Mr. N.N. has since been here to keep up a correspondence between the Revd. Antistes and the English Bishops, as the Bishop of London and others can testify.

Mr. N.N. would also be ready to keep up a correspondence between the Swiss clergy and the Society de Propag. Rel. which has existed in the past, but needs the attention of a careful person, who would send letters and books to and fro. He would also be ready to go to Switzerland with such an envoy or to be sent, as her Majesty's chaplain, to him that is there, with such salary as her Majesty should think fit, so that he should not have to look to the Envoy for anything but his board and clothes.

Mr. N.N. is a free citizen of Zurich by birth, and can say that there is hardly one of the House of Lords there that is not either his relation or friend. He knows most of the Commons there and has many considerable friends at Bern, Basle, Schaffhausen and in the Protestant Grisons. He knows the language and temper of the people, and is able and willing to promote the Queen's interest amongst the leaders of Church and State in Switzerland. He has travelled for thirty years in France, England, Germany, Holland, Brabant, Flanders and Burgundy, and has ever hated the French usurper. Desires recommendation to the Queen for this employment, or some other consideration for his many services if he is not sent to Switzerland.

Memorial on the Customer's Place at Whitehaven.

It is now some years since Sir John Lowther, anxious for the development of the town and port of Whitehaven, which would increase the Royal revenue, found that the Custom house there should be encouraged by some officer of ability.

With this object he recommended to Lord Treasurer Godolphin that Mr. Gilpin should succeed Mr. Christian, who was then old. His being a Justice of the Peace, and of the law, further fitted him for that post. Lord Godolphin approved the suggestion. But soon after Mr. Crofts, a friend of Mr. Christian, made a bargain by which Christian surrendered his patent; and by influence with the [late] King a new patent was obtained for Christian and Crofts jointly. In this Sir John Lowther was, for the time, bound to acquiesce. Crofts died, and Sir John then renewed his recommendation of Mr. Gilpin to succeed Mr. Christian, who is still alive, though very old, and had no fear of further opposition. He is therefore much surprised to find that Mr. Crofts' widow now pretends to the right to name a successor both to her husband and to Mr. Christian, who shall not only repair her for the money which was lost on her husband's bargain owing to his death, but shall entirely act as trustee for her and be accountable for the whole profits. Sir John Lowther believes that such unusual and scandalous pretensions, which are opposed to the prosperity of the port and contrary to law, will not be allowed.

Being interested in the development of the port, of which he is the proprietor, and which he has raised to a considerable height, and in the hope to serve the Queen, he prays that the Lord Treasurer will give him leave to hope that Mr. Gilpin, if he outlive Mr. Christian, may succeed him.

Project for Increasing the Salaries in the Secretaries of States' Offices.

The under-secretaries and first clerks to the Secretaries of State have ordinarily such small fees (especially since the erecting of the third office) that it is hoped the Queen will allow them the following sums by way of New Year's gifts until some suitable salary be fixed for them:—

On account of informations, law matters and orders and directions to the Attorney and Solicitor General to be paid by Mr. Borret out of law charges, 100 guineas yearly to each office...

On account of orders relating to the Ordnance, to be paid out of the contingencies of that office, 50 guineas each...

On account of matters and business relating to the Transport Service, out of the contingencies of the transports, 50 guineas yearly each...

By this means each office will get 900l. a year for all business done for the Queen’s service without fee or charge, “which will not burthen her Majesty in particular at present.”

Memorandum on the Registration of Wool.

The following plain and easy method of registration throughout England and Wales is humbly proposed by John Haynes:

1. Within —— days after shearing, the owner of the wool so shorn, or his servant, shall make oath before some Justice of the Peace of that county of the weight thereof and take a certificate as follows:—

Form follows:—The owner or servant has sworn that the weight was —— and no more to the best of his knowledge and belief, he having seen the same weighed.

This certificate shall be taken to a registering officer, who shall make an entry thereof in a book kept for the purpose.

2. Fellmongers who take wool from the pelt shall once a month make oath of its weight, take a certificate thereof and enter it as aforesaid.

3. No grower of wool, or fellmonger or other person shall offer their wool to be sold before it has been registered with the officer, who shall take the certificate of the justice and deliver out another in this form:—

Form follows. It states merely that the wool has been registered, with date, amount and owner.

4. On the back of this certificate, the owner must take a receipt of the buyer. Owners of wool must be always ready to show such a receipt for wool sold, or else forfeit ——.

Form of receipt follows.
5. To prevent "jobbers*" and others buying up wool with an intent to transport the same, it is proposed that none ought to buy wool but the manufacturers or free wool staplers, or such other person as shall be licensed by the Commissioners for Wool.
This licence shall be grounded on the recommendation of the Company of Wool Staplers or some eminent clothiers, whereby the integrity and honesty of the person may be known. Such person to give bond of —— to the Queen not to transport wool or be anywise abetting or consenting to any other persons doing so.

6. One officer of register in a county may be sufficient to take such entry, who shall (when required) return an account thereof to the Grand Register to be kept in London. This officer for the purpose of taking such entry shall attend every market day in every market town in his county between 1 May and 31 July, in such manner as follows:—

Viz. for Gloucestershire.

At Hampton on Tuesday.
" Tedbury " Wednesday.
" Cyrencester " Thursday.
" Gloucester " Saturday.

This method should also be adopted in Ireland.

If it be thought fit to lay a tax on wool it should be paid when the owner registers it and the owner should receive a receipt for the duty with the certificate of registration. To prevent the farmers and growers suffering it should be provided that all who buy wool from them should pay the tax as an earnest of the bargain, and exclusive of the price of wool so bought.

Memorandum on the Evils Caused by the Export of Wool.

Our clothing wool, whereof one pack weighs 240lb., if wrought into fine broadcloth, is sufficient for employing 63 people at hard labour for a week; and double such a number if wrought into hose. The 63 people are as follows:—

Three men to sort, dye, dry, mix and make the wool fit for the scribler or stock-carder.
Five men to scrible or stock-card it.
Twenty women to spin it.
Six men to weave it.
Two boys to wind quills.
Seven persons (six men and a boy) to scour, burl, full, dress, rack and press it.

The cloth will then be worth 50l. The wool costs 12l.; the dyeing and other charges 3l. 10s. 0d.; the labour and charge of working the wool into cloth 31l. 10s. 0d. The clothier's profit is 3l. 10s. 0d. Deducting therefore the 12l. and the clothier's profit, the loss to the country will be 34l. 10s. 0d., besides what the King will lose in his Custom.

* So this usage is 200 years old.
1702. If this one pack of wool was to be wrought into hose, for which the King receives 7½d. a doz. Custom, there would then be employed 126 people in making it up.

During one year 30,000 packs of wool have been actually landed in three harbours of France. By this export the King lost 75,000l. Custom. If this had been made up in our manufactories, 1,889,940 people would have been employed in making broadcloth, or twice that number in making hose. What a great loss! And, at this time, many thousands of our poor are ready to starve.

"The Deplorable Case of the Chief and other Agents or Officers that have been deputed and concerned in the Preventing the Carrying Away and the Exportation of the Wool of this Kingdom."

Shewing that:—The Commissioners under the Act of 1 William and Mary for preventing export of wool were discouraged in putting that and other laws in execution against offenders merely for want of a fund for paying and maintaining officers. Nevertheless on the pressing solicitation of clothiers and traders in the North (who shewed that several thousand packs of wool were yearly conveyed to Scotland and sent thence (as Scotch wool) to France, to the great prejudice of English industry), the said Commissioners in 1698 sent a number of officers to the North, who, at the hazard of their lives, made many seizures of wool. Other officers were sent to the maritime counties of England where, they made many more seizures, "some of which seizures were, in violation and contempt of the laws, rescued from the said officers and they themselves hurried into prisons," until the wool had been shipped away on ships which brought great quantities of brandy, wine, silks and other goods, which they received in exchange thereof.

The said officers hoped that, in so good a cause, they would have regular salaries fixed on them, and many of them spent part or all of their means; whereby they have not only been rendered unable to prosecute the informations which they have actually commenced in the Exchequer against offenders, but they are now become incapable of further action without a present supply of money.

The wool manufacture of the Kingdom is consequently going abroad, which will be a very great loss to your Majesty and "to our Kingdom in particular and to our trading and working people in general, who in a short time may become a burthen too unsupportable for the rich to bear." This "may be demonstrated from a brief survey printed and presented to the last Parliament, whereby was computed that by the exportation of thirty thousand packs of wool," &c. [Sets out the facts shewn in the foregoing memorandum.]

P. 1. Print. Endorsed (in print) and followed by:—
Names of several persons who, with others, have sent Wool to France in the last three years.

The weight sent by each is stated.

3 [Nov. ?]. EXTRACT from MR. CONSON [Collector] to the COMMISSIONERS [of the Customs ?].

On Wednesday last the Chatham (Captain Bucknam) brought in here the Duchess Dumain, a privateer of 75 men and 14 guns which she took the 29th of October last. She has been cruising westward of the Cape upwards of three weeks and saw about 40 privateers at one time or another in about the 49th parallel.

A Comparison between the Monthly Expense of the late Expedition under Lieutenant-General St. Clair and one now proposed.

This comparison is exclusive of the charge of the Office of Ordnance, in which it is presumed there can be no material difference, as the same artillery, and persons belonging thereto, may be necessary for one as the other.
The troops for the late expedition consisted of 5,013 men, who had with them 583 women.

The monthly expense of these for freight of transports, a hospital ship, store ship, baggage and victualling ships, the agent's salary and victualling the men and women, together with 180 persons belonging to the train, amounted to 11,819l. 6s. 6d.

The troops for the expedition now proposed will consist of 2,000 men, who may have with them 200 women. The monthly expense for these [same items as above] will be 5,472l. 5s. 6d.

Thus in six months there will be a saving [in the cost of the second as compared with that of the first expedition] of 38,002l. 6s. 0d.

Incident charges for necessaries in connection with the first expedition, fitting the hospital ship &c. [details] came to 4,821l. 18s. 6d.

If the ships employed for the first expedition be continued in service the money already laid out on fitting them will be sufficient for any further service. If they are discharged and these goods sold, they will fetch very little.

FURTHER MEMORANDUM on the SAME SUBJECT.
Give particulars of some of the charges spoken of in foregoing.

Latest date, 1703, 1 Jan.

Further notes follow as to later instructions to Sir C. Shovell, letters written to him in May and August, instructions sent him on September 3 and September 9, and a note of a letter to Aglionby of Jan. 1, 1703, about sending to Cevennes.

we should raise for the advantage of trade in arranging the new treaty with that Crown. Look into the Treaty of 1701 and see if the Dutch have [under it] any advantages which we should insist on having. Complaints have come from the English factors in Norway that on their removal from thence, either to come hither or to go elsewhere, they are obliged to show their books and to pay “the 6 and 10 part” of what they are worth, as if they were natives of that country. Consider a remedy for this. Despatch.

Josiah Burchett to Richard Warre.

Please request Lord Secretary Nottingham to inform his Royal Highness of the Queen’s pleasure as to the ships proposed for the East India Company’s service, which is pressing; and say that the Royal Oak, Eagle, Sterling Castle and Lenox will probably be ready to proceed with the trade to Portugal by the latter end of next week. The other four cannot be so soon completed, but will be hurried on as fast as possible.

Submission to Arbitration.

Made between Ozea Perdrau [or Perdrau?] of Cork and John Neille, Proctor General and special on behalf of Messrs. Moses [?], and Gibert of Bordeaux. States that having disputes between them on certain points in their accounts which could not be settled without long suits, they agree to submit them to two gentlemen of Cork, one chosen by each party, to whom they give full power to determine them, agreeing to abide by their decision as legally binding. They agree to put in bonds of 100l. conditioned for their submission to the arbitrators’ decision. They give power to the arbitrators, in case they cannot agree on any point, to appoint a third arbitrator to decide it. They have agreed to appoint Michel Halman, merchant, and [blank], gentleman, of Cork, and will submit to their decision.

Certificate by Ant[ony] Cougote, Rector of Milbrook and Minister of the French Church.

I certify that on 3 December last, which was the Thanksgiving Day appointed by her Majesty, several French prisoners came to the French Church during divine service and behaved very scandalously, especially one Cilly. Many complaints were made to me. Susan Ligaudon, in whose house Cilly lodged, reported that Cilly and others had determined beforehand to come and affront the congregation and laugh heartily. Details.

The Earl of Peterborough asked me yesterday what assistants I had to help me to execute my office as Commissary of the Provisions; and when I told him that I had only one clerk, said that I could not do my duty without more help, for that I must be always, day and night, busy in getting provisions from on board ships or otherwise, and my clerks must also be constantly busy in the store houses, dealing with applications &c. 9 Jan. COUNT DE MORNY to NOTTINGHAM.

I send M. de Pontchartrain’s letters, which will, I think, shew that I have authority to treat about the cartel. Had you asked me this question sooner I should have asked for a more ample power, but I think this letter should suffice, because the ancient treaties of exchange were made no otherwise.

The Commissioners have told me to be ready to leave for Oxford on Monday. I shall always be ready to obey their directions, although I am still very ill. If I have wished to stay here it is only to finish the affair of the cartel, which you allowed me to commence.

9 Jan. M. de SOREL to the DUKE OF [ORMOND].*

Milord, duce,

Thank you for all your kindness. The Vice-Chancellor and others here are very kind to us every day. If a prison could ever be beautiful, this is so; but it never is so. We know we must be patient, as we hear the cartel is almost broken off. We have wine only for five or six days, and after that shall be reduced to beer and water, which is bad for M. D’Aligre. The wine at the inns is bad. I desire leave of the Queen to go to London for two days to order good wine. All our fellow countrymen send their respects. Pray send me back soon to my wife. Details.

[10 Jan.] The COMMITTEE [for Plundered Goods] to the QUEEN.

In obedience to your Majesty’s Order in Council of 6 December, we have been aboard the Oriana and Susanna transports, laden with goods taken from the sunk galleons at Vigo. We found the hatches all sealed down and the seals did not appear to us to have been altered. We have given orders for unlading these ships and the galleons as soon as the warehouses are able to receive the goods.

10 Jan. NOTTINGHAM to COUNT DE MORNY.

I return your papers, which contain rather instructions than the power necessary to treat of and sign a cartel. When you have proper authority, power will be given to Commissioners by the Queen to arrange some fresh clauses and complete the whole matter of the exchange of prisoners. When you get your power you 11 Jan. George Clarke to Nottingham.

His Royal Highness desires to know her Majesty's pleasure as to when the four 70 gun ships, which are now ready for service, should sail.

11 Jan. E. Dummer to Same.

I purpose that the last sloop of the four, the Bridgewater, shall be at Falmouth about 28 January for your orders, unless unavoidably prevented. News has reached Falmouth that the first sloop reached Barbados, but I have not heard the date of her arrival.

The envoy of Tripoli to the States General, who is recommended to me by Mr. Stanhope (her Majesty's envoy at the Hague), complains of his ill circumstances and sends a list of his things, which he says are detained in the Custom House. He desires them and some relief till he goes back to Tripoli. Pray submit the case to the Lord High Treasurer for his directions.

Same. Nottingham to the Commissioners of Sick and Wounded.

The Queen desires, as you know, that no French prisoners should be kept at Portsmouth or near enough to it to see what passes there. You are not to burden the sea-side towns with too many of them. You must try and place them inland either where there are troops to guard them or prisons to secure them.

You may tell Count de Mornay that I have often given orders for releasing any French ships which were here before the war, and am sure they have been carried out. Colonel Codrington may indeed have threatened severe usage to the French officers taken at St. Christopher's, being provoked to it by the escape of those who were sent to Hispaniola; but he need not fear that such threats will be carried out. Tell him that the prisoners who escaped should be returned. It is a constant rule that a guard should not be insulted when taking prisoners to any place in their own Prince's dominions.

Same. Hedges to the Prince's Council.

To take steps to release two Swedish subjects who have been pressed as sailors [details], and give them tickets for their wages.

The Commissioners for Sick and Wounded to Nottingham.

We have already ordered the removal of all the prisoners of war at Gosport to Farnham, and ordered that all other prisoners set ashore at Gosport or Portsmouth be brought there. We have not succeeded in getting the sheriffs to admit them into the county jails, though Secretary Blathwaite assures us that wherever we find suitable places for them within 80 miles of London we shall have guards. Enclosed shew how unjustly the people of Southampton complain of the infection spread by the prisoners.

Details. We send a letter received from our agent in Jersey.

A. Mathew Jobson, surgeon for sick and wounded seamen and prisoners, to the Commissioners for Sick and Wounded.

The prisoners here are not, as alleged, very sickly. Not one has died since they have been here. Care is taken to quarter any who fall sick, when necessary.

It is not true that they suffer because I am too ill to take care of them. I have a cold, but only staid in two days. I have trusted servants who look to them daily, and they do not want medicine. We have not lost 40 out of 300 who were mostly sick with very malignant fever. The petitioners making these allegations are malicious.

B. Edward Hammond, agent at Jersey, to Same.

On Sunday last a boat from St. Malo landed two merchants here, whom I have in custody.

They said when examined that they came to buy stockings and tobacco and to arrange a correspondence with these two islands and so to have a constant trade to France. The merchants here are disposed to have such a trade, and do not want the French merchants who come here to be either molested or imprisoned. Lieutenant-Governor Collier has written to Lord Secretary Nottingham about it and told me, before several officers, that but for my depositing money for maintenance of the French prisoners he would take no cognizance of my authority from you or anyone else, but only from the Queen and Council and bade me tell you so.

Hedges to M. Rozencrants.

Yours of to-day. We cannot go further in renewing the Treaties until we know how far the King of Denmark is satisfied with the answer to your late memorial, regarding the arrears of the subsidies paid by England to Denmark. Amongst the treaties which should be renewed is that of 1696 and the article by which the King of England agreed to pay the disputed 100,000 crowns. Parliament has twice considered it, and has always refused to grant the money. For this reason it seems necessary that the King of Denmark should agree to accept 200,000 in discharge of all claims under that Treaty, or to find some other way of accommodating the difference between us; or else leave the matter out of this Treaty and put in a clause to say that it is concluded without prejudice to the question of subsidies under the Treaty of 1696. There is no deliberate delay, for the Queen is resolved not only to renew the existing treaties with Denmark, but to enter into a closer alliance with that Crown—one so close that no enemy of either party can break it.

I shall make no delay in getting for you a reply to the memorial sent as answer to a memorial handed in (as alleged) by Mr. Stanhope at the Hague. I only wait to hear the state of the affair from him.

NOTTINGHAM to the LORD KEEPER.

I understand from Sir Thomas Hanmer and Sir R. Mostyn that there is a Commission of the Peace for Flint ready to be sealed and sent down, but that it is delayed owing to alterations in the list of the justices for reasons which they have given your lordship under their hands. It will be very prejudicial if this commission cannot be sealed to-day, so as to be sent down against the next Sessions on Thursday. I join them in asking you to despatch it.

[13 Jan.] The EARL OF PETERBOROUGH to the DUKE OF MARLBOROUGH.

Your Grace seemed to expect that I should explain my thoughts to you on this occasion rather by a letter than by an interrupted discourse in the House of Lords. If the Dutch forces arrive and pursue the voyage, I am ready to go into my coach in an hour's time. In the last conversation I had with their ministers, they pretend[ed] that their ships and soldiers were ready and that the first fair wind would bring them to Portsmouth, and that their memorial goes no further than to state that the season is far gone and that they offer other services if those at first desired cannot be effected. These easterly winds and fair weather will not leave that matter long in suspense. If this affair comes yet to depend on her Majesty's resolutions, I can only say what I said the other night, "that five weeks' time is sufficient to bring the greatest design in America to a decision that a safe port and a convenient inlet for trade with the Spaniards, whether it can be possessed in the beginning or end of a campaign, the difference in respect to the Dutch is only this, that it may now towards the latter end of the season be effected with less expense to them, and their men and ships sooner returned and exposed to less hazard; [and] that if the fleet sail by the end of the month there will be near three months fit for service. Whether any other design proposed can be of equal consequence to the public I will not pretend to determine, but I can hardly pretend anything can make amends to England for the present disappointment, the men already sent into America, and four and twenty capital ships, being made wholly ineffectual to any considerable design for want of this supplemental quota of force from the Dutch, and the English troops and ships not possible to be brought back time enough for any European service next summer.” It is useless for me to go immediately without sufficient force or artillery for a sudden action. Such attempts would be of no service to the public, and we can do nothing till next season;
but attempts can be made upon us by our enemies.

Civil government in Jamaica (particularly getting the grant of the revenues for 21 years, which they must comply with or have the perpetual Act passed, as by my instructions) can be as well despatched by my Lieutenant-Governor as by me; and if there is a chance of any small military expedition, Colonel Handeside has the reputation of being one of the best infantry officers we have. Towards the end of the summer, according to the Queen's designs or the motions of her enemies; I shall be in a better position and readiness to go to the West Indies than at present, since the short time I had to prepare caused me to neglect all family and private affairs in the public interest. This I was willing to do on a great occasion, but I do not think the Queen will require it of me when there is no pressing public work to do, and when I continue prepared to serve her in those parts as soon as season and opportunity allow. Any designs against the French islands may be pursued by “Coronell” Codrington. They lie properly under his jurisdiction and station and are inconsistent with the position of Jamaica, which is more conveniently situated for designs against the Spaniards. I am sensible of the honour the Queen designed for me and hope I have been zealous in her service, “and I assure you my Lord, the Queen shall ever find a real and hearty obedience from me in what part of the world she is pleased to require my service against her enemies.”

P.S.—This settled fair wind makes me lament the present disappointment the more. The Dutch excuses are more extraordinary, since all the world knows that M. Pontis’ [Pointis’] expedition was undertaken at this time. His success shewed it was not too late.

Colonel Holt to [Hedges].

I have taken all the best information I could regarding the complaint against Captain Henley, and am sorry that the Duke of 1703.

Marlborough and the "Cabinet Council" should be troubled over so small a matter. Vindicates Henley on grounds set out in the affidavits of Rich and Sutton (see enclosures). Proceeds:—
The town complains of the great oppression from the number of prisoners and of the liberty which any of them who will pay the marshal a small fee can have to walk abroad.

Relates tenor of first enclosure and desires they may be laid before his Grace.

A. Certificate of the Mayor and others of Southampton.

We certify that there being many French and Spanish prisoners placed here, we have been much alarmed by mutiny amongst them, but that, since Captain John Henley came here we are made much easier by his conduct and care, and hope to be preserved from all danger by his continuing care.

B. Affidavit of William Rich, corporal of Captain John Henley's company.

Sworn, he says:—

On 4 December last he was corporal of the guard where the French and Spanish prisoners are kept in Southampton. Captain Henley came at 8 a.m. on that day to look at the prisoners, as he frequently did, through a large hole. Some one or more of the prisoners spat in his face, which made him angry. He called on one Sutton, deputy marshal, for the keys, and that the men who had so offended should be discovered and brought out. The prisoners refused to do this, and the Captain, in anger, struck some of them with a small sword in the scabbard without doing them any harm.

C. Affidavit of Francis Sutton, Deputy Marshal of the French and Spanish prisoners.

6. No persons shall be suffered to walk on the grass, but only on the gravelled path or in the Mall, except only such as are employed in the Park about planting and pruning the trees and other work.
7. The park-keepers and others above mentioned are to take care to keep hogs and dogs out of the park.”

I regretted incurring your lordship’s displeasure more than being taken into custody. I heard I was to be indicted at the Old Baily, but believed in a little time your lordship’s anger would wear off. I did not in the least intend to reflect upon the present ministry, as anyone who reads the book will see; and any remarks in it which may have been so taken were only designed to reflect on the maladministration in the late reign. No such charge could be brought against the Queen’s Government, which is only in its infancy. For the last seven years I have been laying open the hypocrisy of the dissenting party, and now am in such a position that I am better able to wound that party than any man that may have ten times my sense. I have tra[cked] their actions for many years past and can make all honest men, even of their own party, desert them, and so “break their heads as it were with a cushion,” and will do it if I can be discharged, for I have no bail.

Same. Same to Same.

“I having been occasionally the cause of a bill’s being brought into the House of Commons entitled ‘A Bill for the more free and impartial proceedings in Parliament &c.,’ and finding the said bill would no ways answer the end for which it was intended,” I thought I ought to draw up my reasons against the said bill. When it was read a second time, I drew up the following reasons and sent them to a person of honour, whom I believed to be interested in the preservation of the Church of England. The bill was to be read in the full house on the 14th, but was postponed to the 16th. Meantime I send my reasons for fear the bill should have passed the House of Commons and that your lordship may see that no unkind usage can make me forget my duty.

I am delicate and have “an astmaph” and feel the closeness of the air and nearness to the water very much. I fear I shall soon die if not set free, and pray for release.

A. Reasons against passing a bill entitled, A Bill for the more free and impartial proceedings in Parliament.

The passing of this bill will actually deprive all the trading part of the nation of its birthright; for the writs which are issued for calling a Parliament direct the several cities and corporations which have the right of election to choose or elect members from among themselves, so that the trading part of the nation will be deprived at once of their birthright, few or none of them having the real estate qualification for membership required by this bill, if it pass.

The passing of this bill will greatly disgust all the gentlemen in the country whom it makes incapable of serving their country in Parliament. All men are unwilling to be deprived of that to which they have a legal right, even though they reap no advantage thereby.

"The passing of this bill will greatly prejudice the Church of England and strengthen the hands of the Republican party, who represent themselves to the People to be the only friends to trade &c.; so that if the Scotch Union should not take place (which is much to be doubted) it may be of dangerous consequence at this time to make so great an innovation in the Legislative Power."

The bill, if passed, can be of no great benefit to the State, for the gentlemen of England have now in a manner as much influence as they might or could have if the bill were passed.

COUNT DE MORNAZ to NOTTINGHAM.

I have yours of the 10th and instructions sent by you from
M. de Pontchartrain. These authorise me to consent to all the terms of the proposals which were sent to France by the Lord High Admiral. I do not think I need ask for a fuller power, since treaties of that sort are always concluded by such writings.

As you know it was always your idea to agree on the terms here and then send the formal Treaty to France to be signed, as was done in the last war.

You told me that you were anxious to agree on reasonable terms. M. de Pontchartrain put forward those of the last war, to which you would not consent. The other terms sent to France by his Royal Highness were accepted by the King, as I told you six weeks ago. Nevertheless you have not let me have any positive answer about them. If you have any additions to make, they can be made when the Treaty is drawn up in form. It will be sent to Calais, where M. de la Tour Montfort has authority to sign it if the person who goes over has a like authority from England.

If you desire that the Treaty should be signed here, I am sure that authority to sign will not be refused me if I apply for it;
and, as you say you have further articles to add, I beg that they may be sent me, so that I may explain them to M. de Pontchartrain at the same time as I ask for this authority. He will tell me the King's views on them. Otherwise any step I might take might be useless as beyond my authority. I doubt if the King will consider the question of exchange of man for man unless everything is arranged at the same time. I await your positive proposals.

WARRANT to the MAYORS, Justices, Constables &c. of Cumberland to arrest CAPTAIN CHRISTOPHER DALSTON.

The warrant sets out that Dalston listed one John Cubbidge* of Cockermouth to serve as a soldier contrary to law, that it appeared to several justices that Cubbidge was so listed without proper authority and that Dalston was ordered by them not to trouble Cubbidge further on that occasion, but that he re-took Cubbidge contrary to law and in contempt of the said order. Proceeds:—

You are therefore to arrest Dalston and bring him before me with sufficient sureties to be bound for his appearing at the next General Quarter Sessions of the Peace to answer on the matter and meantime to be of good behaviour, which, if he refuse, you are to convey him to the Common Gaol at Carlisle and deliver him there to the keeper with this precept, to be kept there till he do so or be released by due course of law. You are also to cause Cubbidge to come before us or some other justice for Cumberland to be discharged according to law.

P. 1. Signed by R. Lamplugh. Addressed as in heading and endd. as follows:—

Sir,

Captain Christopher Dalston came before me this morning pursuant to your warrant. "We did not, as I remember, discharge Cubbage* without his consent at our request upon his former retainer by usual way of voluntary listing a man into the King or Queen's service, nothing appearing to the contrary at the time, otherwise than that he was duly listed; nor do I think the Justice of Peace has anything to do in this case. If they do [anything], I perceive the Queen would get few soldiers. If the man have a mind to be acquitted he must appear before a Court Martial. This is the judgment of your most humble servant.

Same. Nottingham to Lord Walden.
The service for which the troops going to the West Indies are designed is different from, and much shorter than, what was originally intended. Please send me a deputation to him that I may send it, with his instructions, to-night.

18 Jan. Instructions by the Lord High Admiral for Captain Hovendon Walker.
I have ordered H.M.Ss. Resolution and Blackwall to join your squadron at Barbados; or, if you have left there for the Leeward Islands, the Resolution to go on there with the transports with soldiers, naval stores and provisions, and leave the Blackwall at Barbados for duty there. If these ships join you at Barbados you are to take the Resolution under your command and leave the Blackwall for duty at that island. If the Resolution joins you at the Leeward Islands, take her and the transports with her under your command and protection.

When joined, proceed in the service as a Council of War of the sea and land officers [details] shall determine. Proceed with the utmost care in such service until May 20; and when occasion arises, spare such men and guns as you can to assist the officer in command of the land forces in any attempt on the enemy which may be resolved on. If it be thought necessary to leave a full regiment, or part of a regiment, at Martineco, if Fort Royal shall be taken, you shall leave such ammunition and provisions as the Governor or commanding land officer shall desire and think necessary for such number of men as he shall leave there.

Having done all you can against the enemy till May 20, repair with all your ships, transports, stores and such soldiers as the chief land officer shall appoint to Port Royal in Jamaica. Join Vice-Admiral Benbow there and place yourself under his command or that of the Commander-in-Chief of the squadron for the time being. Carry to Jamaica as many French prisoners (if any) as you can, that they may be brought to Europe.

The Queen, having read his Royal Highness's report on the case of Captain John Evans, is pleased to remit his suspension. He may be employed again as his Royal Highness thinks fit. Acquaint his Royal Highness with this.

3. To Mr. Methuen.

I have yours up to December 26. You must insist that none of our men-of-war or packet-boats be visited or stopped on their voyages. However, to prevent abuses of any kind to which the King of Portugal may object, the Queen has directed the commanders of those vessels not to take any goods to or from Portugal, and not to take any persons on board except with passes either from the King of Portugal or his ministers or from yourself or some other of the Queen's ministers. If they suspect contravention of these orders by any packet-boat, you must send some servant whom you can trust to inspect it and may do right if you find a case for it, but if you find the suspicion is false.

* Supra, 531, note.
your certificate to that effect must be enough. The Queen will punish herself any commander of a man-of-war who breaks the rule, but will not permit the vessel to be searched.

I have communicated this to the Portuguese envoy. Inform the King of it and it will surely satisfy him.

The convoy for Lisbon will reach almost as soon as this.

Our merchants complain of a tax, called a donation, laid upon wine at Madeira, contrary to our Treaty. Get redress for them. The Portuguese envoy here is sure they will satisfy us.

I have nothing to add on the main negociation. It is strange that you have not yet got a plain and positive answer.

Yours to 26 December received. The Queen has ordered a ship to go and take off her subjects from Teneriffe.

In case your father should be come away, you may open my letter to him and take it as directed to yourself.

The Queen would have the convoy for the East India ships proceed as was formerly directed without the addition of the service ships mentioned in your memorial of 14 January. Her Majesty desires you to direct a ship at once to go and bring her subjects home from the Canaries. Let me know before the captain sails.

19 Jan. INSTRUCTIONS by the LORD HIGH ADMIRAL to VICE-ADMIRAL BENBOW, Vice-Admiral of the White and Commander-in-Chief in the West Indies (or any acting in his place).

1. I have ordered ten ships [names given] to join you at Jamaica as soon as they have performed what service they can against the enemy in the Leeward Islands. They will bring with them transport ships with soldiers, victuals, naval stores &c., and in all probability will arrive with you by May 20. When you receive this, get all your ships together at Port Royal in Jamaica in readiness to join the aforesaid ships from the Leeward Islands when they arrive, and take them under your command; and receive on your warships and transports (save such as by charter-party are to discharge at Jamaica) such land forces as the Commander-in-Chief of the land forces [which are to join you] shall desire.

2. Consider what four vessels [details] had best be left behind at Jamaica as a guard, and leave them there with a proper commander-in-chief and instructions. Leave also the two fire-ships lately equipped by that Government.

3. You are to appoint such three other of your ships as you think best to come home to England to act as convoy to the trade which, we hear, is there ready to come home.

Wt. 3880.
4. Leave two other ships at Jamaica to come home with any trade which is ready to come home at the beginning of August. Both convoys to report at Plymouth and, failing orders there, to come on to the Downs.

5. Detach two of the 4th rate ships with orders to go to Virginia and join the other vessels (sent there direct as a convoy from England) in convoying home the Virginia trade. The senior officer on board the convoying vessels to take command.

6. This being done, you are to repair as soon as you can with transports, victuallers and soldiers to Newfoundland, and consider, at a Council of land and sea officers, how the enemy may be attempted and destroyed at Placentia as well as at their other settlements there, with their fishing tackle, shipping &c. Employ your squadron to help in what may be agreed on. If you can spare them, detach some vessels to attempt the enemy's fishery on the Bank, and, after the attempt, to rejoin you at Newfoundland, where you can re-form and come back to England and Portugal.

7. If when you come from Jamaica you think that you will be too early in Newfoundland, you are to go to Boston and take aboard thence any soldiers which the Government there can spare to help you at Newfoundland, provided that the Government there can furnish embarcations to carry such men to Newfoundland and back again. Otherwise you are not to take them with you.

8. After the attempt at Newfoundland and the Bank and the re-assembly of your squadron, you shall detach some ships to convoy the fish ships for Portugal to that port (Lisbon) and Oporto, from which these vessels shall at once return into the Channel (with trade, if any), report at Plymouth, proceed to the Downs and send in an account of their voyage. The commander to make sure before he enters any port of Portugal that there is not a rupture with that Crown. If he finds there is, he must bring his convoys direct for England.

9. Having done this, come home with the remainder of your squadron and such merchant ships as shall be coming over. Take care that none of your ships bring over any fish except what is wanted for the ships' company. If you have on board any regiments intended for Ireland, land them at Cork, convoying the transports thither. Bring thence any regiments which may be ordered to England and ready to embark at Cork.

10. Do not imprest men from the privateers at Jamaica, as it may disenable them to commit spoils on the enemy, unless it is absolutely necessary to do so. If you do it, take as few as you can.

11. If you have imprested, or otherwise obtained any men from Jamaica, put them on shore before you leave, that they may be employed in the service of the island, or at least so many as you can conveniently spare.

12. Provide for bringing home any French prisoners who may be taken and brought to you. [See foregoing instructions to Captain H. Walker, p. 543, par. 3.]
19 Jan. INSTRUCTIONS by the LORD HIGH ADMIRAL to CAPTAIN LYELL of the Resolution, at Spithead.

1. Receive Colonel Collenbme and such other officers as shall accompany him, together with their servants and equipage, allowing them victuals when aboard as to your ship's company. If you cannot accommodate them all in the ship you command, see that it is done aboard the transport ships or others in her Majesty's pay that are bound to the West Indies.

2. As soon as they are accommodated, take the Blackwall under your command, and use your utmost diligence to get in readiness to accompany you all the transport ships with naval or ordnance stores and provisions which shall be bound to the West Indies.

3. When the Blackwall and these vessels are ready to sail, proceed at once to Barbados and put yourself under the command of Captain H. Walker, if you find him there, or anyone else acting for him.

4. If you find Walker has gone on to the Leeward Islands, leave the Blackwall to act as guard at Barbados and go on with the other vessels to join him there. If, at Nevis, you hear that he has gone to any of the English or French plantations, join him there with the other vessels.

Note of clause for putting the ships' companies on short provisions.

5. Take with you any vessels bound for Jamaica or Barbados which are ready to sail and convoy them to those places.

[About 20 Jan.] SIR WILLIAM HODGES to HEDGES.

You lately ordered that the Spanish captain and one of his men should return to Spain to get an exchange of forty-eight English prisoners there, or a testification that there were no English prisoners in Spain, for the forty-eight Spaniards now prisoners at Southampton, and [you said that] the French King would not exchange Englishmen for Spaniards, and that the forty-eight Spaniards might be set at liberty.

The Englishmen who have been carried into the ports of Spain by the French have been allowed to depart for Portugal in order to embark for England. Fifty of them lately went from Cadiz to Faro, and were taken aboard the Revenge (Captain Kerr). Pray move her Majesty in Council that these poor Spaniards may have their liberty; for, as Spain does not detain any English seamen, it is not likely that France will surrender Englishmen for Spaniards, there being so many Frenchmen now here; so that these poor Spaniards may be left here till the war ends unless they are allowed to go in exchange for the Englishmen daily expected on the Revenge.

Moreover their release may be of value to me and others of her Majesty's subjects who have still great concerns in Spain.

Memorandum by Count de Mornay.

Don Fernando Chacon has begged me that the thirty-five Spaniards here should, as well as the Frenchmen who are here, be exchanged for Englishmen who are prisoners of war in France in the cartel which may be made by France and England. I promised him to insert them in the cartel. I am sure that the Comte de Pontchartrain will not object to my having done this without having got his permission, for the relief of these thirty-five men.

NOTTINGHAM'S LETTERS.

1. To Colonel Codrington.

I send your commission to command in the West Indies during the time mentioned in your instructions. Hope for your success.

As sickness and war may make vacancies in your ranks, the Queen would have you place half-pay officers (some of whom have gone to the Indies) in the vacancies as they occur, suitably to their rank. Your commission gives power for this.

"The French have represented to her Majesty that you have threatened to hang some officers whom you took prisoners at St. Christophers in case the French prisoners whom you sent to Hispaniola, and who mastered the vessel on which they were embarked and went with it to a French island, were not restored." Now though they may justly be reclaimed, and her Majesty does not believe you will execute these menaces, yet for their satisfaction she asks me bid you not to execute them.

The officers will tell you what artillery and mortars are sent with these ships.

Josiah Burchett to JOHN ELLIS.

Sends, for Secretary Hedges, a letter (copy) from Captain Bloyce* of the Swan.

Captain Bloyce to [Josiah Burchett].

I met at sea a galleon hoy belonging to Gottenburgh loaded with brass, copper, pitch &c. bound for Rhoan [Rouen]. I thought it best to bring her into the Downs till I heard his Royal Highness's pleasure about her. On the 17th I met with a Dane at sea that came from St. Martin's in France and put into Brest water owing to bad weather. They say that great preparations are being made there in order to fit out what ships are in that port, that an embargo is laid on all merchant ships and privateers, and that seamen, fishermen and boatmen are summoned from all the ports to man the fleet.

NOTTINGHAM'S LETTERS.

1. To Vice-Admiral Benbow.

Yours to October 20 [details] and others from Mr. Browne and Captain Whetstone received. The Queen is very pleased with your conduct "and much offended with the baseness of those officers who deserted and betrayed you." You will hear more from the Prince's Council. I only lament your misfortune in losing your leg. I hope this will find you otherwise well and "that you are reserved to do her Majesty and your country still greater services, of which no man is more capable than yourself."

2. To Colonel Beckford.

Yours to 16 October received. Your accounts are very satisfactory. In future no French who are taken are to be sent to Hispaniola. The Queen is justly vexed with the officers who were the occasion of Du Casse's escaping. Your zeal in service, &c.

* Also spelt Bloys.
3. To Colonel Handasyd*.

I send enclosed to you as Sir William Beeston is dead. Haines' case seems hard. Examine it and report if he has been unduly oppressed, so that the Queen may give him relief if he deserves any and you cannot relieve him.

P. 1½, with note that it enclosed:—

a. The case between Joseph Haines and his wife.
b. Order in Council of July 9, 1702.
c. Copy of certificate of Mr. Montague, 17 April, 1701,† and also the following:—

d. Nottingham to Colonel Dudley.

Yours to November 8 [details] received. There was no intention to take any of the men you should raise and send to Jamaica for recruiting the regiment there. They were to serve in distinct companies and go back to New England when their service was over. To prove this I am to tell you now that you need not send any men whom you have raised to Jamaica. If they have already gone they will be sent back to New England and you may be sure of the Queen's favour to them, and acceptance of your ready obedience &c.

It is probable that the ships now at Jamaica will call at Boston on their way home to England. If so, any of your men there who please may join them on the services intended.‡ They will be allowed to return to Boston when they please, though, unless they go on ships belonging to New England, they will scarce have opportunity for it.

4. To Colonel Codrington.

The Earl of Peterborough is not going (as Governor of Jamaica and commander of the forces) to the West Indies.

Several ships are, however, going with soldiers, transport ships and stores and I send by them a commission to you and her Majesty's instructions.

I send you the names of some gentlemen who went with recruits from Ireland, on an assurance from the Lords Justices of that kingdom that, on a vacancy, they should be provided for. There is reason for it, because at the same time some of the half-pay officers refused to go. The Queen would have them provided for next after the half-pay officers as follows:—

P. 3. Ibid., pp. 6, 7.

* The name is spelt in several different ways.
† The substance of a, b, and c not entered. It is merely noted that they were sent.

HEDGES to the PRINCE'S COUNCIL.

By command:—I send the East India Company's memorial as to the best way to suppress the pirates that infest the Indian seas, for your consideration and report.

COUNT DE MORNAY to [NOTTINGHAM].

I send a letter received through Holland from M. de Pontchartrain since my last.* You will see that in France they expected an agreement on the articles which had been sent there before, and that I cannot answer positively on the new ones, which are quite contrary to the first.

If you desire me to give an answer to the second, third and fourth paragraphs of M. de Pontchartrain's letter, please tell me how you would have them answered; so that I may add that answer to what you have told me to say on the difference which arose after the taking of St. Christopher's between the commanders of the two nations. When you tell me what you would have said I will send my letter for M. de Pontchartrain to you. As to what he says in the third and fourth paragraphs, it has been confirmed by letters to me from all the officers who have remained at the seaports, that naval officers visit, and seek to engage, the French prisoners [in the English service] and clergymen to make them change their religion.

A. M. de Pontchartrain to Count de Mornay.

1. I have yours of 26 December. I am surprised that you receive no reply to our answer to the proposals of the Commissioners for Exchange of Prisoners. I hope they will soon make up their minds. As the King has consented to all their terms you have nothing more to offer them.

2. If what you hear about the treatment of the French prisoners at Portsmouth is true, I am sure that the officer there will be treated with exemplary justice. Insist on demanding justice, since what has been done is contrary to international law and punishable in all countries.

3. They write to me from Portsmouth that our prisoners are still very ill, and that no care is taken of them. Complain of this to Lord Nottingham, and tell him that our [English] prisoners if ill, are placed in a hospital at Dinan, and that when the number of sick there lately increased another house was taken for them.

4. Escaped prisoners from Portsmouth bring us news that the English officers often go amongst those who are there and try to make them change sides, offering them money, and that they have got over three men from St. Malo. The King desires you to complain of this to Lord Nottingham and to send his answer.

* See above at 17 January, 1703.

John Coulston came of a very good family. His grandfather was a Justice of the Peace and was a great sufferer in Oliver's time. His father was a very honest gentleman, and John Coulston himself during his abode here behaved very honourably, having given to the minister of the said parish 15l. per annum, and 10l. per annum to the parish poor, which was all the estate he had, his family being formerly reduced. He is well affected to the present Government, has been well educated and is a true Churchman, and so was his father and grandfather; so we think him a worthy person and capable to be instructed with any office.

25 Jan. M. Dubourdieu to [Nottingham].

My Lord. I have seen Sieur Pagis. He said to me that Mercet, Fabrot, Faure and he had in their hands all the goods which the Genevese had at the Exchequer, which may be worth more than 300,000l. sterling.

Genevese merchants treated with the French ministers for supply for the army of Italy. They are Buisson, Saladin, Lullin, Perdreaux, Faure &c. It is a fact that on the Place de Lion their credit does not go far. They must draw, for their enterprise, on the purse of Holland, England or Geneva. Their plans for England and Holland will be disconcerted by what has been done in relation to Huguetane, Seignouret, Pages [Pagis] and others.

But, my Lord, that is not enough. Geneva is a wealthy city. The merchants here have 300,000l. sterling in the Exchequer. This means more than 20,000l. (a year) in interest. News comes to Geneva by post of the value of companies' shares &c., and they have only to offer one or two per cent more and the owners [of the money] remit to them the funds which they have here, of which they can dispose to furnish [provisions] in compliance with their treaty with France.

It would be a stroke to ruin their credit at Geneva. This would lance the source of evil. It could best be done if your Highness would have Pagis, Mercet, Fabrot and Faure arrested. After that means should be found to sequestrate the principal and interest of the Genevoise so far as the justice and delicacy of your Government would permit it. If the Republic protests, they should be reproached for their neglect of the common cause and the complaints made to them by the Emperor. They are aware of the contents of treaties which were made with their knowledge.

To save appearances you might have a memorial thereon presented by Count Wratislaw, which should merely declare here what his master's minister has done in Switzerland. I send my views and am zealous if not able.

If you do not think fit to arrest Mercet, Fabrot and Faure, pray have pity on Pagis, whose health and fortune suffer greatly. He may be set at liberty without fear, on caution given, for he is not the man to escape.

COLONEL COLLIERS TO NOTTINGHAM.

I send enclosed, from which it appears that the prisoners only came to Jersey to try to trade in tobacco &c.; but I think they had some other errand. I will keep them prisoners till I have further orders.

A. Declaration by Edward Dumaresq.

A month ago the Sieur St. Paul, living at St. Malo with his man, came to my house at 9 p.m. and asked me to go and sit in my Court to hear a special statement. I did so, and he asked me, as a friend of the Sieur la Vallee Bin, to protect him in buying from me 6,000l. worth of tobacco, half for himself and half for Bin's wife. I said I was surprised at his boldness in coming into an enemy's country and to me, an officer, and that I should have to hand him over to the Governor, and that I should go and tell the magistrates. He begged me not to, and to let him go to M. Sealle or M. Pipon, whom he had helped to get away from St. Malo, and that he hoped to get Messrs. Orange, who were still near St. Malo. [Details.] I kept them in my house, and informed the Lieutenant Bailly [bailiff], who referred me to Charles Dumaresq, justiciary, and said that then I could keep the foreigners till to-morrow and then inform the Governor. I did so next day, and handed over the foreigners' papers, which they had given me.

S.P. Dom., Channel Islands 2, 44A.

b. Examinations of Paul Causerouge de St. Paul and Francis Brusley.

De St. Paul says:—Lives at St. Malo. Arrived here nearly a month ago. [Details.] Went before Edward Dumaresq, who &c. [confirms last declaration]. Deponent told Dumaresq he had come to the island to try to trade and agreed to go before the Governor, but begged that his arrival might be kept a secret from the French in the island; otherwise it would become known in France, and he would not dare to return there.

Brusley says:—I came to Jersey to serve St. Paul as I do business in Jersey, as St. Paul said. Confirms briefly the foregoing.

Pray consider how prisoners pardoned by the Queen on condition of their taking service in the Navy or Army may be set free and drafted into the service immediately after the warrants for pardons are signed, and without waiting for a general pardon to come out. The Queen hears that there are many delays in this matter, whereby the health of the pardoned prisoners is impaired and the Queen loses the benefit of their services.

Royal Warrant to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland for Joshua Dawson.

Joshua Dawson has petitioned, shewing that:—The Governors of Ireland have been used, on leaving office, to take with them “the books of entries belonging to both their Secretaries’ offices, wherein were entered all King’s letters, orders, warrants and letters directed to and given by such chief Governors, the removal of which has not only been a great injury to our subjects of that Kingdom for want of copies of such orders upon many occasions, but a great prejudice to all succeeding chief Governors in being deprived of the knowledge and information of what had been done by their predecessors.”

Petitioner has been employed in the office of the "Chief Secretary* to the said chief Governors" for many years, and, during that time, has had many applications for copies of such warrants and letters, which he has not been able to grant for the above reason. He therefore prays for the erection of a Paper Office in Ireland, in which copies of all these documents may be kept, except private letters. He has been bred up in the Chief Secretary's Office and has been zealous in his long discharge of the duties of that office.

He prays for letters under the Privy Signet and Sign Manual creating and erecting an office, to be called the Paper Office, with directions to future chief Governors to allow him to take copies of the books of entries of all warrants, orders &c., belonging to either Secretary's office (private letters excepted), and that a room be appointed for the office in Dublin Castle; and for 100l. a year for himself and his clerks, to be inserted in the Irish Civil List as a perpetuity. You approve his request.

Pass patents under the Great Seal &c. erecting a Paper Office accordingly, wherein shall be kept "duplicates and copies of all King's and Queen's letters whereon any warrants, orders or directions" shall be given by you and also duplicates of all warrants &c. issued thereon; and also all other warrants, petitions and letters which have [passed] or shall pass "the said Secretaries' offices or either of them" (private letters excepted). The patents shall grant to Dawson the office of Clerk of the Paper office to hold during pleasure, to exercise by himself or a deputy approved by you. Salary of 100l. a year, to be inserted in the Civil List as a perpetuity. Allow Dawson to take all the copies aforesaid "to be kept by him in the said office which is to be an office of Record," and appoint and fit up at our expense a proper room in the Castle to be his office.

NOTTINGHAM’S LETTERS.

1. To the Postmaster[s] General.

I send enclosed from the Duke of Queensberry. He says there is one in town empowered to adjust this matter. Wait on him and find out who it is.

2. To the Commissioners for the Sick and Wounded.

Queen’s command:—Remove immediately from Southampton Captain Coshart and all the French officers who are prisoners there to some inland town, where they may be kept close prisoners. Your officer there has been very negligent in allowing eleven of them to escape at one time, and your officer at Plymouth is also negligent in letting the prisoners at Plymouth walk in the town and go even two or three miles out of it. Queen’s command:—To find some place more suitable than Plymouth, where they have an opportunity of seeing the preparations; and meantime to guard them more carefully.

Send a weekly account shewing the number of prisoners.

3. To MAJOR HOOK, Lieutenant-Governor of Plymouth.

The officers of the garrison at Plymouth, as well as the Governor, are to blame for the too great liberty allowed to the French prisoners there; for they carry the French about the town and to some distance from it “to shoot and for other diversions.” This liberty should not be suffered, and as the Commissioners of Prisoners* are ordered to keep them more strictly whilst they are at Plymouth, you will do well to prevent the garrison officers from taking them abroad anywhere out of prison, so that the proper officer may have no excuse for neglect of his duty.

Colonel Colenbine writes that he has no orders to embark. I thought you had taken care in that matter, for I presume that the Prince or the Duke of Marlborough must sign them. No time should be lost. The fleet has been ordered to proceed to sea with the Portugal convoy for more safety.
Also note of information being sent to Admiral Allemonde. P. ½. Ibid, p. 8.

6. To Captain Atkinson, at Portsmouth.
Refers to Collenbine's having no orders to embark. Proceeds:—The masters of the transports need only be ordered to obey the commander of the ship on which Colonel Collenbine is, and, after arriving in the West Indies, to obey the orders of the Commander-in-Chief of the men-of-war to which they may be attached from time to time. Details.
P. ½. Ibid.

7. To Brigadier Colenbine.
I have written for orders for you to embark your men, which I hope you will soon have.
I do not know what may be necessary for your service, but have acquainted the Duke of Marlborough with your letter, so that you may have orders.
I hope you will not take it as a diminution to you that Colonel Codrington, who is junior to you, is to command you. He is Captain General and Governor of the Leeward Islands, and, as such, has the right to command in operations which are almost under his own Government. I need not argue this matter with you, a zealous servant &c.
Colonel Codrington is, by his instructions, limited to a time for his service, which will consist with the other service on which you are commanded. I wish you success.

8. To the Prince's Council.
Pray report on the enclosed request sent by the Dey of Tunis.
As the Queen will probably have a squadron in the Mediterranean this year, and that will be a proper time to renew the peace with the Governments of Algier, Tunis, Tripoli and also "Sally," and some presents are usually given to these Governments on those occasions. Pray look into the existing treaties with them and see what change, if any, should be made; and also consider the question of suitable presents.

The Prince's Council to Nottingham.
Yours, with an extract of one from the Dey of Tunis. We have considered what presents should be sent to that Government and to Algier, Tripoli and "Salley," and what stores the Dey of Tunis desires from her Majesty, and what alterations or additions may or ought to be made to the present Treaties with each of those Governments. We have no objection to the sending of the usual presents to those places when occasion offers; as to which you will hear best from the Lord High Treasurer’s office and the Office of Ordnance. As to the guns and mortars which the Dey of Tunis desires, and the sails and furniture for five ships of war, we cannot advise, except to say that we think it better that the few merchants trading there should pay the additional 5 per cent custom than that we should part with so many guns and stores. If these guns and stores are sent, the presenting of them may be treated as a precedent.

We have no additions or alterations to suggest in the treaties unless the Queen, on advice of the Privy Council, thinks that some such should be made.

A. Charles Taver, Surgeon of the sick and wounded at Weymouth, to the Commissioners of Sick and Wounded.

A French prize of about 29 tons, loaded with salt, was brought in here this morning. She was first taken by an English privateer, retaken by a French privateer, and forced into Portland Road by heavy weather. There the Castle, suspecting them enemies, fired two guns and sent a boat on board, and they surrendered. I secured three men of the French privateer who were on board. They say that the French grand fleet will not be fitted out this year, but they have about fifty privateers belonging to St. Malo, some of considerable force. They say there are about 700 English prisoners at Dinan, and that M. Chateranaud* has not yet returned from Paris.

The Commissioners of Sick and Wounded to Nottingham.

As ordered, we have directed Captain Cusart* and all the other French officers to be removed from Southampton to Farnham. It is the only inland town wherein we have been able to procure a small place for keeping prisoners at war. The inhabitants of Southampton have spread such reports of infectious sickness among the prisoners that though we inquired at all the principal inland towns, and offered six times the rent formerly given for the houses, we have not been able to obtain the accommodation we require. We shall make further inquiry and, meantime, take all possible steps to have the prisoners well secured where they are, having frequently commanded our officers not to allow any prisoner to walk about in the towns; but the closeness of the prisons has made it absolutely necessary to remove many of the sick to town quarters. There may, we fear, be a few cases of escape, but we shall punish severely those who, by their neglect, make such escapes possible, and hope thereby to prevent the recurrence of them. Our officer at Plymouth is lately dead, and we have given to his successor such instructions as will, we think, obviate complaints from that quarter in the future.

We are gathering information with a view to sending you a weekly abstract of prisoners, and as soon as we have received that from Southampton, will write to Count de Mornay. The Marshal at Southampton, in his letter of 10 January last, told us he had buried thirty prisoners, and has 738 under him. Since then we have heard that they have been more healthy than before. We hope the complaints of neglect of the sick prisoners will appear groundless. Two of this board who were there were very well pleased with them, and the chief inhabitants said that the prisoners wanted nothing that was necessary.

NOTTINGHAM'S LETTERS.

1. To the Prince's Council.
I send news from Dunkirk.
Command:—To send frigates to cruise thereabouts and prevent such misfortunes.
Also send orders to the ship which has Sir B. Granville's goods aboard to hurry on with all speed to Portsmouth in the hope of catching up the West India ships and being able to go with them. It would be prejudicial to the Queen's service to order all those vessels to wait for her.

2. To Sir Beville Granville.
Repeats substance of foregoing. If his vessel takes advantage of the tides she should overtake him before he gets out of the Channel, if not earlier.

P. ⁴. Ibid, p. 11.

JOSIAH BURCHETT to RICHARD WARRE.
Inform the Secretary of State that, the Prince's Council having been told of the coming out of French ships from Dunkirk and the capture by them of the Ludlow, orders have been sent to the Weymouth, Lichfield and Lynn to leave the Downs and stretch out towards Calais and thence to stand away towards Camper Down off the Texel. Thence they are directed to stand over towards the Bar of Newcastle and so to return by the East Coast. By this means it is hoped the French ships may be met with. Other vessels will be sent in quest of them as soon as may be.

A. Extract from a letter from George St. Loe, Esq., Commissioner of the Navy at Plymouth, dated 26 January, 1703.

The Dutch privateers seize Swedes, Danes and Hamburghers coming from France or Spain. Yesterday I was on board a Hamburgher which was brought in hither. She was lately from Malaga and Cadiz, which places are, they say, in miserable condition for want of trade, and the French men-of-war about those parts are very much afraid of our men-of-war coming unawares on them. They have left the galleys at St. Mary Ports and themselves are gone off to Talloon [Toulon].

The French also report, to keep up the drooping spirits of the Spaniards, that the Swedes and Danes are to join them this summer with sixty sail, so that the English and Dutch will not be able to look them in the face; "but I take it to be only French news."

30 Jan. The Lords Justices of Ireland to the Lord Lieutenant.

Dublin Castle.

In obedience to your Excellency's order we have considered with the Chancellor of the Exchequer, the three Chief Judges and the Attorney and Solicitor General about the substance or heads for such bills as may be properly prepared here before the meeting of Parliament, and we send you a rough list* of them, merely to show what sort of bills we intend to prepare when ordered to do so. We did not ask the judges to sign this paper as their opinion, because they and we thought that you wished the matter to be treated by way of discourse only between us and them, in order that we might send your Excellency such of their views as we thought fit; but, nevertheless, we think it right to lay before you plainly the opinion of all who joined in this discourse. They are all of opinion that in view of the poverty of the Kingdom the meeting of Parliament should be postponed as long as possible, even to another year if that might be consistent with the other circumstances and state of the revenue and Kingdom; that, if Parliament meet here this year it should be as late as possible in the year; that the bills mentioned are thought as proper to be sent over with the first transmission as any they can think of. With regard to the Money Bill, we considered whether the Parliament might not be more pleased and more ready to give what money they are able to give if the granting and manner of raising it were left wholly to themselves without any Money Bill being prepared or offered by the Crown at all; "and this being introduced by Mr. Solicitor, which brought us upon the former famous point of Sole Right (his remarkable part in which is not unknown to your Excellency), it concluded (as appears by the paper) to be the general opinion of everybody (the Solicitor excepted) that the Queen would think it convenient to bring in a Money Bill; and that if she should do so the proposed Excise Bill would be the most proper.” The Solicitor wished it to be known that he thought it better that the Crown should offer no Money Bill at all, and gave reasons which are too long to be touched upon in a letter. He chiefly relied on the strong reasons which there were at present to please the people, who might be expected to be out of humour for giving money, and thought that if money were expected from them they should be gratified in the manner of giving it.

“As to what was objected for the contrary opinion by others of the Queen’s being advised in this to quit a right of which the Crown had been so lately so very tender, his answer was that once waving was not a quitting it; and that if it should be constantly insisted on and practised by the Crown, the people might with reason be jealous that their submitting to it would establish it by their consent. Whether Mr. Solicitor or the rest of the gentlemen consulted with are in the right or wrong as to the point of their differing opinion and advice” is submitted to your Excellency; also what part of this discourse you will submit to the Queen. We think that both parties have said what they have said in a desire for the Queen’s service.

Together with the list of bills, we send you copies of the letters which passed between the Court of England and this Government on the occasion of the meeting of the late Parliament, so that you may have precedents under your view. We shall obey all your directions.

P.S.—The enclosed two letters are all that can be found relating to the orders from England for calling of Parliaments, which are entered in the Council books. Any other letters of the same kind were “carried away by the several chief Governors, to whom it appears that the first orders for preparation of bills were always sent, and not to them and the Council.”

A. The Lords Justices of England to the Lord Deputy Capell.

As administrators of the Government in the King’s absence, we congratulate you on your entry into the Government of Ireland and assure you of our readiness to give you our best assistance in promoting the King’s service there and the welfare of his subjects. As the King left directions for the immediate calling of a Parliament there, we desire you to lose no time in causing such bills to be prepared as you think fit to pass in the Parliament and, as soon as they are ready, that they may be transmitted hither in form.

The Commissioners of Sick and Wounded to Nottingham.

Send enclosed. Despatched to Harwich at once to prevent the escaped officers from getting away thence. Have suspended and replaced Jackson in the charge of the prisoners pending the Secretary's directions.

A. Thomas Jackson, Marshal for the prisoners at Southampton, to [the Commissioners of Sick and Wounded].

Last night news was brought that Cushart and Latooch, "who is the Irish captain that was at London,"* made their escapes by getting open the street door, which never had any key left in it after the people went to bed. It is thought they went to Winchester with a design to get to Harwich and go over by the packet-boat. I have despatched a messenger after them [by the] London road who, if they go that way, will certainly take them. I am now mounting horse to search for them at some great Papists' houses near this town, but wish their Honours to send a despatch to Harwich at once, for, if we take them not, they will certainly be there. I have prepared a house for the others and shall get them in, but this is only a temporary arrangement, as the house is not large or strong enough. The captives are all uneasy at this news of no exchange this war. No man can take more care of them than I do.

Colonel Gibson to Nottingham.

I have been at Southampton and applied to the Mayor and other justices there. Jackson was before us, and also those who carried him and the French captain to Gosport, who cannot tell what they [Jackson and Coshart] did till they [the others] came and fetched them back the next day. I cannot yet find, but must discover what they [Jackson and Coshart] did during the day they were at Gosport, but I fear they were not idle. Depositions which I send shew that in Guernsey and Jersey they are much afraid of him; and, if he be got over, I am afraid they will have a bad neighbour of him. This captain knows all our creeks [?], banks and sounds as well as any Englishman, and is more dangerous in consequence. Those poor masters of Jersey and Guernsey ask that they may have better convoy in future.

The Mayor was in doubt as to whether to put Jackson into custody or not. I then showed him for the second time your lordship's orders to me and said that if Jackson had been anywhere in the county, [so] that I could act as justice of the peace, I should have put him in the county jail; and called on him to imprison and supersede Jackson. They promised this.

Bernard Ellis to Nottingham.

In obedience to the Orders in Council of December 17 (issued on Sir Thos. Hardy's complaint to the Lord High Admiral and received January 16), I have done my best to arrest deserters from the fleet who had got on to a Guernsey privateer. One, Brock, has surrendered, and the rest, except John But, are, I hear, on the Runner, privateer, Robert Slowley commander, now at Plymouth. The Runner lately took a French privateer of 16 guns and brought her into Plymouth. She was formerly an English frigate, the Falcon. Prisoners report fifteen men-of-war ready to sail from Brest. Will look out for and secure deserters.

After meeting them report the result to her Majesty at the Committee of Council at St. James' at 6 p.m. to-morrow.

The Queen approves the use of the squadron intended for Portugal here, as the Lord High Admiral and Admiral Allemonde agreed at their meeting to-day. Please inform the ambassadors.

Colonel Gibson to Nottingham.
I send an affidavit received from the Mayor of Southampton, and his letter, the last paragraph of which shews what he desires. I know nothing of him, but presume that Mr. Cardonell, who represents Southampton in Parliament, can give you some account of him. I am just going to muster and embark Brigadier Columbine's regiment; and when that is done am going to proceed with the two companies of Major-General Erle and the detachment of the "Fuzaliers." Some officers fear disturbances, but I hope that the method I have taken will prevent them.

A. Thomas Bracebridge, Mayor of Southampton, to Colonel Gibson.

I send an affidavit* and will send any further news received. If Mr. Jackson is removed, pray recommend me for his office.

The COMMISSIONERS of Sick and Wounded to NOTTINGHAM.

Three masters of English merchant ships, who have been released from Ostend, have, in accordance with the terms of their release, applied to us, on behalf of themselves and five of their officers, for the release of two merchant masters and six seamen of that place who are prisoners here. They tell us you sent them to us, saying we had power to agree to the exchange. We have some doubt as to whether yours of 23 December has given us that power, and ask for special directions.

Admiralty Office.

MEMORIAL to the QUEEN in COUNCIL by PRINCE GEORGE OF DENMARK, Lord High Admiral &c.

By an establishment made by King Charles II in Council on 18 December, 1677, the following rules were established for qualifying persons to serve as lieutenants in the Navy:

1. That they shall spend so much time actually at sea in one or more voyages in the service of the Crown (after abatement for all intervals) as shall together amount to three entire years at least, and to have served in the quality and performed the duty of an ordinary midshipman in some one of the ships of war for one year at least of these three, receiving midshipman's pay for the same.

2. The second part of the above not to apply to any who—
   (a) has then served at sea for more than two years in the quality of volunteer by warrant from his said Majesty or the Lord High Admiral;
   (b) abides the examination and answers in every respect what is required from him except midshipman's service.

3. He shall not be under 20 years of age at the time of his first admission to the said office.

4. He must produce certificates under the hands of his several commanders testifying to his voyages, and to "his sobriety, diligence, obedience to order, applications to the study and practice of the art of navigation," and to his having served as a midshipman, as before required (except as before excepted).

5. He must produce a like certificate under the hand of one at least of the principal Officers and Commissioners of the Navy, who has served as a commander at sea, as also of two other commanders of 1st rate or 2nd rate ships of war [details as to alternatives], jointly certifying that, after examining him at the office of the Navy, they are satisfied that he is able "to judge of and perform the duty of an able seaman and midshipman," and has "attained a sufficient degree of knowledge in the theory of navigation" to capacitate him for it.

By a long practice in the Navy, no young gentlemen have been or ought to have been admitted to serve as volunteers in the fleet by warrant from the Lord High Admiral who are above the age of 16 years or under that of 14. It is common for them to be admitted before they are 16 years old. When they have served two years as a volunteer and one as an ordinary midshipman they are entitled to an examination and, if found qualified, to the employment of a lieutenant, so that probably some of them will by that time be not above 17 or 18 years old.

It is therefore proposed to her Majesty that when any young gentlemen shall hereafter be admitted to serve as a volunteer on any of her Majesty's ships at the age of 14 years, or between that and 16, they be obliged actually to serve four years as a volunteer and two as an ordinary midshipman before being admitted to the examination for a lieutenant's office. And whereas divers persons have from their youth addicted themselves to the sea with hopes of preferment in the Navy, when they have by their industry qualified themselves for employments, and, in order thereunto, have served in the fleet as midshipmen and mates, it is further proposed to her Majesty that, notwithstanding such persons have not served as volunteers by warrant, yet that, if they have served three years in the Navy either as mates or midshipmen (after abatements for intervals of voyages), and produce certificates [details] of this, they may, as an encouragement to them, be admitted from time to time to an examination, and, if found qualified, to a lieutenant's office.

3 Feb. Southampton. CAPTAIN COSHART to [NOTTINGHAM].

I wrote to ask your leave to go hence and be with my brethren. I wished to be treated as an officer of the King of France. I desire to be protected by you against the insults which the Sieurs La Rufie and Jouchée, officers of privateers, have put upon me by reason of my last letter to your lordship. They said I had written against them [!] and abused me violently, as you will see by the evidence, signed, of eye-witnesses which Count de Mornay will send to you. I hope for justice. I hope you will not confound a number of prisoners who are here, who had no part in the matter [,with the guilty ;] and I hope for justice to those who insulted me.

NOTTINGHAM’S LETTERS.

1. To the Commissioners of Sick and Wounded.

Yours of yesterday. As to the three masters of English merchant ships and their five officers, who were prisoners of war at Ostend, and are now released on condition of obtaining the enlargement of two masters of merchant ships and six seamen of that country who are prisoners here, you must find out if the Englishmen, on being taken, ransomed their ship of the privateer and were taken to Ostend as hostages for payment of the ransom, as has been too usually done. If not, find out the facts as to their capture, taking to Ostend and release, and report to her Majesty.

Sends a memorial of the Portuguese envoy for consideration and report.

Four lines. Ibid, p. 204.

3. To the Attorney General.

I send papers relating to one Jackson, for whose arrest and bringing up in custody I have issued a warrant. Consider, on the depositions, what prosecution the offence will bear and what crime I may lay to his charge in the warrant of commitment.

Also note. Enclosed were a letter of Mr. Cardonell of January 23, 1703, and depositions of John Hides, Joseph Man, Charles Wallis, John Le Cras, William Snow, Daniel Tapin, Aron Dereville and Moses Goodridge.

In all p. ½. Ibid, p. 205.

4. To Paul Methuen [jun.].

I have read your father’s letters to 15 January to the Queen. To the demands which are put forward [by Portugal], no answer can be given. It would be impossible to accede to them. If the King of Portugal comes down to reasonable terms, which your father did not expect, we may not be able to agree, but, at least, there will be some ground for negociation and for a treaty “it being most apparently as much for the interest of Portugal as it can be for ours.”

The envoy of Portugal here has not receded at all from the original demands, though I pointed out that it was quite impossible to accede to them and hoped he might have reduced them. But, after I had spoken with him at length and pointed out the desirability of prompt and early action by Portugal, and assured him of our willingness to do all we can, he said he would write fully on the matter. It was right to let you know this.

Queen’s command:—Forbidding passengers to go on the packet-boats to or from Holland unless they have passes from the envoy at the Hague, the Commander of the forces in the Low Countries, her Majesty, the Captain-General of the forces [at home] or one of the principal Secretaries of State. Give directions accordingly.

[4 Feb.] Petition to the Queen of John Henry and Peter Huguston, of Amsterdam, merchants, shewing that:

Petitioners are burgers and merchant bankers in Amsterdam, and deal in foreign bills of exchange. They lately sent several bills payable in London to Paul Bretton of London, book-keeper. These were drawn on English merchants in London, who have drawn bills on petitioners, which they have accepted. The said bills are now due.

Above three weeks ago Bretton was arrested on Secretary Nottingham’s warrant, and is still confined on suspicion of remitting moneys for the subsistence of the French troops.

Petitioners are innocent of that matter. When Bretton was arrested, his papers were sealed up. Amongst them are books and papers of petitioners. The bills [drawn on petitioners] are due, and petitioners must make them good, and will be ruined if those seized are not restored, so as to be paid.

Pray for restoration of the said bills to Bretton.

JOHN HOLLINGBERY, Mayor of Dover, to NOTTINGHAM.

I have received the enclosed two* letters about him, and do not know how to deal with that of the third, so send it. The persons who wrote it are in London, and may inform you if they have anything material to say. Pray send me directions what to do.

A. John Yeats to the Mayor of Dover.
I hear one who goes by the name of Johnson is in Dover gaol, "a little man in black, a very high nose, and wears his own hair." He goes by so many names he cannot be found in the City of York, where he was in prison twelve months and pilloried for perjury and forgery, by which he intended to take away the lives of several honest gentlemen. In that place he went by the name of Bonan. He was in jail at the Savoy last year, when he came from France under the name of Morgan. He sometimes passes as a priest and sometimes as a Presbyterian. Other details. His real name is Mark Goodyear, and he was born in Holbourn in London. He has often tricked the Secretary of State. I desire to know what he is in jail for now, that his further mischiefs may be prevented.

General date, DOCUMENTS relating to the alleged IMPRESSMENT of MEN in CUMBERLAND.

1. Information of Captain Christopher Dalston, of Sir Richard Temple's regiment, taken on oath at Hayton Castle on 6 February, 1702, before Sir Richard Musgrave, Bt., J.P.

* The second is probably Smith to Hollingbery (p. 570, supra), which is in the Naval papers.
1703.

Informant says that on Monday, 1 June last, at the house of Mr. John Inman, of Cockermouth, in the aforesaid county, he gave one shilling to John Cuppage, a fiddler in the said town, as a retainer to serve in Temple's regiment. Cuppage accepted the coin and was lawfully listed. Nevertheless, on 18 January last, Richard Lamplugh, Esq., a J.P. for Cumberland, issued his warrant to arrest informant and bring him before a Justice to give security for his appearing at the next General Sessions of the Peace to answer the premises and to be of good behaviour; and informant was compelled to make immediate application to Sir Richard for relief therein. Sir Richard had made a former examination of the whole matter in the presence of Mr. Lamplugh, and was satisfied that Cuppage had been lawfully retained. He therefore superseded the warrant, and informant hoped to have no further trouble; but Lamplugh, continuing his endeavours to prevent him from enlisting men, issued forth another warrant the very next day (January 19th) to arrest and bring before him the said Cuppage and several of informant's other men. And in pursuance thereof the constable of Lorton and about 14 or 15 men and horse, headed by Mr. Robert Lamplugh, son of the said Richard Lamplugh, J.P., came to informant's house at Lorton, assaulted informant and took away Cuppage and four other of his soldiers and brought them before Richard Lamplugh, Esq., who detained Cuppage and sent the others back to their quarters, as they tell informant. Informant believes that he can prove that Lamplugh has kept Cuppage in his home and under his sanctuary ever since the said rescue.

Certificate by William Tyson, Constable, and Anthony Preston, Sergeant.

We certify that Captain Dalston, having a man deserted from him at Whitehaven, had a warrant from Justice Gilping to search for him, and that William Robertson, attorney, denied the warrant when Dalston wished to search his house.

This concludes the documents relating to this case.

The Commissioners of Sick and Wounded to Nottingham.

According to your orders, we send an account of the numbers of prisoners at war in the custody of our several officers on 31 January last. We have told them to let us know of any increase or decrease in these numbers from time to time, and will send weekly lists.

A. List of Prisoners referred to above.

P. ¾. Ibid, 30A.

In obedience &c. we asked the three English masters of ships lately prisoners at Ostend as to the terms of their release. They were taken by men-of-war and did not ransom their ships, nor were they detained hostages there, but were set at liberty on bonds of 200 guilders to petition for the release of certain 6 Feb. Southampton. THOMAS RICE to HENRY LEE.

I went to Lyndhurst on the 4th with Mr. Taunton, of this town, to examine the Queen's stables. They are very commodious [details of measurements], with good lodging-houses over the stables and coach-houses. You can judge how many men they will hold. There is one butcher in the place, and two or three more three miles from thence, and at Ringwood there are many butchers, some of which bring meat to Hampton market, which is 16 miles away, and Lyndhurst is but seven from there. Kitchen furnaces may be set up outside under a skilling of the side of the stable or in one of the coach-houses.

Soldiers can be quartered in one of the four public-houses in the place, or in the chambers over the stables, or in part of her Majesty's house. It has now in it only a small family to keep it clean. There is a great bakehouse within three or four miles, and as for garden stuff those of the place bring it to market for want of a trade for it at home.

6 Feb. Whitehall. NOTTINGHAM to the LORD TREASURER.

Recommends that Mr. Alexander Griffith, Attorney General of New Jersey, be paid a year's salary of 60l. in advance, as he desires. This will promote the service by enabling him to go to his duty.

7 Feb. Portsmouth. BRIGADIER COLENBINE* to [NOTTINGHAM ?].

Yours of the 5th. I make no difficulty about serving under Colonel Codrington, and am proud to serve the Queen in any capacity. I am ready when wind and weather permit, and wish all things in the expedition were so. I hope the wind will soon prove kind.

7 Feb. Farnham [Surrey]. The FRENCH OFFICERS at FARNHAM to [SAME].

Twenty-five of us are here, sent hither by the marshal of Southampton. They have shewn us the prison which is being made ready for us. It is a place where the water lies, dark and without windows, and very low. We can only hope for straw for beds. If this happens we do not think we can live eight days.

At Southampton we had houses of the townspeople for prisons, and behaved ourselves as we were ordered. We beg for a similar favour here, or, at least, for a place where we can have beds by

Hedges’ Letters.

1. To George Clarke.

Her Majesty desires all the general officers to be present at the meeting at the Horse Guards and give their opinion in the case of Sir Henry Bellasyse and Sir C. Harra, and lay it before her Majesty as soon as possible. An account to be taken of those who are present and absent. Give notice to all that the may speedily comply.

2. To the Attorney General.

The town of Great Yarmouth have lately petitioned for incorporation of themselves and the town of South Town in Suffolk as a borough. The town claims an Admiralty jurisdiction to the exclusion of that of the Lord High Admiral, which has occasioned many disputes and obstructed the course of justice. Consider the matter and report what grounds there are for this pretence in their charter, and what may be done to settle the matter and prevent the like inconveniences in the future.

Royal Warrant to the Master General of the Ordnance.

(Duke of Marlborough).

Having by warrant of 14 March last ordered a train of artillery to be prepared to go over to Holland for our service there, we now find it requisite that that train should be augmented. You shall cause the several brass ordnance, mortars, ammunition and other stores of war mentioned in a schedule hereto annexed to be forthwith provided and made ready for our service. You shall cause the officers, gunners, bombardiers and other attendants belonging to the said train to be regulated and established, with their respective pays per diem, as is mentioned in a list hereto likewise annexed, “which we do hereby approve of and establish accordingly,” and shall pay these officers and men out of the sums paid in from time to time to the Treasury of the Ordnance for land service; the pay to commence from 18 February next. You may also diminish the “natures of ordnance” and proportion of ammunition and other stores and attendants as you think fit, or add to them.

These names are very difficult to read. I give the best reading I can offer.

I have cause to believe that, since your lordship's just management of printers and publishers, the method of printing pamphlets will be carried on, as formerly, in Holland, where they print everything. I think it right to tell you that John Gellibrand, quondam Clerk of the Cheque to the Messengers, has a post at the Custom House, where he may be serviceable to such a trade, he passing all books that are taken up there. He is put in there by the Archbishop of Canterbury, has his warrant from the Treasury and is paid at the Custom House. He is busy about something and keeps company every night at a certain place with some lords and others. I thought fit to tell you this knowing your eyes cannot be everywhere.

9 Feb. Proposals tendered to the Queen by Sir Jeffrey Jeffreys.

Your Majesty has arranged a service of four packet-boats to the West Indies, whereby frequent advices may be sent from and to those parts. The same method will be advisable in relation to communication with North America, “and New York being the centre of those parts.”

Sir Jeffrey proposes to furnish your Majesty with two vessels suitable for that service. One of these, with twelve guns, forty men, oars and strong fittings for the winter service, will leave the Isle of Wight for New York in a month, stay there 30 days only, in which time letters may be sent to and answers received from New England, Virginia, Maryland and all adjacent Colonies, and brought back to the Isle of Wight, at 200l. a month. From thence the ship shall depart in twenty days or so soon as is directed.

The other vessel to be fitted with eight guns and thirty men, to be ready two months later and keep the same course, at 150l. per month. By this means your Majesty and your subjects may send and receive news from those parts every two months.

The ships must be allowed to take in passengers who offer, and a few goods for ballast on both journeys, not exceeding fifty tons and thirty tons respectively. The crews must be protected both at sea and on shore, the hire to be paid quarterly and to have three months’ pay imprest.

By command of his Royal Highness, I send the enclosed copy of a letter touching the ill-treatment of English prisoners at Dunkerque to be laid before her Majesty’s principal Secretary of State.

P. ½. (Hol.) Endd. S.P. Dom., Naval 118, 35. Enclosing:—

Captain Cock to the Commissioners of Sick and Wounded.

The English prisoners here are kept seventy or eighty in a room, so that one half have to rise when the other half lie down. They have tasted nothing but the worst of cheese, and what they have had from the English nuns here and myself in charity. They are not allowed to leave their rooms on the greatest occasion, and “do everything that nature requires in common where they lie." There are orders from M. Pontchartrain to keep me under close confinement, although the captain of a Dutch man-of-war taken last summer by the galleys is at large. They scrutinise our letters very closely. The reason given for this is that they hear that the French officers and men in England are ready to starve in their prisons. I believe, on investigation, that their informant on this point is the Count de Mornay, who was taken at Vigo. "And not only these things, but matters of more moment are very well understood here, insomuch that in two minutes after my coming on board and before anybody was spoken to, I was told by one of the ship, not proper to be named, that they were purposely fitted out for the taking of our ship and a less in the river, and did expect a yacht to be sent over into Holland for a person of quality and lately an Embassador"; but the damage received from us has, I hope, prevented [this], for, had not the wind been fair that day we were taken, so that we got in the next, both our own and the enemy had sunk in the sea, the latter having all night four and five feet of water in the hold.

I am assured here that if no cartel be arranged, there will be no difficulty about my being exchanged for any French captain, and beg that his Royal Highness will favour me accordingly. I hope to give a good account of the loss of the ship. On examination I find the killed and wounded were about seventy.

The Commissioners of Sick and Wounded to Nottingham. We send a copy of a letter from our new Marshal at Southampton.

The Duke of Ormond proposed to one of us that we should exchange M. Soreli, now a prisoner at Oxford, for Captain Cock of the Ludlow (5th rate), lately taken. We are told that M. Soreli held important posts. [Details.] Besides your lordships' orders to remove the prisoners from Southampton inland, we have had complaints from the people of Southampton that the report of sickness amongst those prisoners keeps people from their markets. We have made inquiries and heard of some stables belonging to the Queen at Lyndhurst.

A. Peter Stanley to the Commissioners of Sick and Wounded.

I have found from Coshart's servant that Latouche bought two horses and that they [Latouche and Coshart] went to London. Details A little brother of Coshart's is left there with an ensign who was very intimate with them, and, I think, knows where they are, and has, I am informed, heard from Coshart since he left. I keep him here in case the Board wish to send for and examine him.

Pp. 1¼. Dated, Southampton, 6 Feb., 1703. Ibid, 36A.
COUNT DE MORNAY to NOTTINGHAM.

I have heard from M. de Pontchartrain. The King of France is surprised at what is asked of me as to my powers, since the Commissioners themselves sent me proposals for a cartel to send to France and since I had signified his Majesty's consent to you, and he had done all that could be expected of him. [Details.] But I hear that the King consents to my treating for a cartel for Spaniards taken at sea as well as French subjects making separate treaties. If necessary, a power for this will be sent me. I think therefore that all difficulties are settled; and, as the power must now be on the way, we may begin. I am to tell you again that M. La Tour Monfort, commandant at Calais, has been authorised to sign [?] the matter and has a passport for the person you send thither.

I am to say that unless the French prisoners in England are better treated, retaliatory treatment will be dealt out to the English prisoners in France. The English sick in France are in hospitals at Dinant, of which they will be deprived unless there is similar relief given in England. Repeats demand for punishment of an officer at Southampton.

Proceeds:—M. Pontchartrain will be surprised that my protest against the attempt to induce captives to enter the English service is only answered by the Commissioners with recriminations. As to the charge that such things are done in France, they could not be done without express authority from the King. I will, however, get proofs [details] that there is no foundation for the charge. I have endeavoured to keep silence in this matter and to bring the two parties together, for the relief of unfortunate men.

SAME TO THE COMMISSIONERS OF SICK AND WOUNDED.

Though the King [of France] is greatly surprised at the want of punctuality which has been shewn in dealing with the cartel, I am informed by M. de Pontchartrain that I shall soon have power to treat for a cartel applying to both French subjects taken at sea and Spanish subjects.

Expresses hopes for a speedy settlement, otherwise a number of poor soldiers on each side will perish, which should not happen amongst Christian peoples. Proceeds:—M. de Pontchartrain tells me positively that there are as many prisoners in France now as you can have in England. Thus a treaty for exchange is as much to be desired on one side as on the other, and I shall be always ready to deal for it when I meet with the required sincerity.

HEDGES' LETTERS.

1. To the Commissioners of Sick and Wounded.
I see from your list of prisoners that 68 of them are still at Gosport. All prisoners there and at Portsmouth and Plymouth must be removed inland. Her Majesty consents to liberate three French prisoners in exchange for the three English masters who have been discharged. Let me know the names of those whom it is proposed to set free, and their qualities.

As the supplies of provisions sent to Jamaica from here and from New England and Carolina may be more than are needed, command: To order your agent and Jamaica to sell any of them which may not be required for the soldiers and seamen who remain in those parts after the service is over. Keep accurate accounts [details].

The PRINCE’S COUNCIL to HEDGES.
Yours of yesterday. We do not object to giving up Captain Mathias Depray, of Dunkerque, in exchange for Captain William Hester, who is now a prisoner there, if it does not appear that Captain Hester’s ship was collusively taken (which does not appear here), and “that the French ship was not actually a privateer and not a trading ship with a letter of mart.”

HEDGES to the PRINCE’S COUNCIL.
I send M. Leyoncrona’s request for release of several Swedish ships which are embargoed here. Command:—Consider and report on it.

1703.

the best of his memory it was about the middle or the latter end of November last that Sir G. Parker, Mr. Goring and two other gentlemen, one of them being a Frenchman of small stature and
"a cast with one of his eyes," taken to be Captain Coshart, came on board the Royal William with a boat and a boat's crew from Hampton, and stayed there about a quarter of an hour, From thence they rowed up the harbour and, Lane believes, went on board the Victory. Three or four days later, he saw the Frenchman again at Gosport, and, about a fortnight later, saw him again riding out of Gosport.

When the said gentleman come on board the Royal William none of the officers were on board but himself, the boatswain being gone to work in the ordinary. The Frenchman conversed with nobody there except those with whom he came.

Josiah Burchett to Richard Warre.

Pray move Lord Secretary Nottingham to advise the Queen to send to the Council of Scotland for the seamen which the frigates are going to that Kingdom in order to bring here for the fleet.

The Commissioners of Sick and Wounded to Nottingham.

Yours of the 9th and to-day. As to the first, the prisoners whom we stated to be at Gosport are at Fortune, a little village a mile from that place. They were too sick to be moved with the others to Southampton, but will be sent there as they recover. Our agent at Plymouth has orders to look out for some place inland in which to keep prisoners and, meantime, to keep them so close in prison that they cannot see what is going on in the port. Details, with names, as to exchange of prisoners for English prisoners at Ostend. Proceeds:—If you approve of our discharging these and of their being permitted, on their return to Ostend, to promise the surrender of any other two Ostenders of equal quality with Hendrickensen and Jacks, we presume the English masters will be acquitted of the obligations they entered into for this exchange. They say the judge at Ostend assured them that if these men were returned all the English prisoners at Ostend would at once be liberated.

We have instructed our officer at Farnham to do what he can for the accommodation of the French officers there consistently with their security. He finds it very hard to find house-room for them. Having your strict orders we had to order them to be sent thither and accommodated as best could be. We have been prevented from sending prisoners away from the seaport towns, as you directed, by the difficulty of getting house-room for them; but we hope that, as they grow more healthy (which they do) the people will be less unwilling to let houses for the purpose.

We are negotiating, under orders from his Royal Highness for the exchange of Captain Cock against Count de Mornay. We have informed the Count of it and of the ill-treatment of the English prisoners at Dunkirk, of which Captain Cock was an eye witness. We have sent him the sense of Captain Cock's letter and told him how much more cause for complaint those prisoners have than the French prisoners here, who have 5d. a day allowed for each soldier, 6d. for each commander of a privateer, and 12d. for a commissioned French naval officer. Those who are sick or wounded receive the same treatment as her Majesty's own subjects.

We send a copy of part of a letter* from Count de Mornay concerning his authority to settle a cartel.

12 Feb. Sick and Wounded Office.

E. Burt to [Nottingham].
The number of French prisoners who died up to Jan. 31 is 281.
1703. Commissioners of Transportation. The Commissioners of the Navy have given orders accordingly, but submit that the charge of these vessels should not be paid out of money appropriated for the Navy, which it cannot be without exceeding the estimates. I therefore propose to the Queen that neither the charge of this nor any other transportation be laid on the Navy.

The men in hospital die at the rate of eight or ten a day. If this continues they need not trouble themselves about a cartel. I never heard of any of them having any medicine, whatever be their illness. There are about 550 or 600 English and Dutch prisoners. Many have run away. About 28 are now going out of hospital to the French privateers. Instead of being better used, we are worse. The Governor is very sick, and if he dies I fear we shall be worse treated.

P. 4. S.P. Dom., Naval 118, 44.

Notice is given that, in this time of war, no person whatever is to be received on board of any of her Majesty's ships as a passenger or on board any of the packet-boats at Harwich or Falmouth, or to go abroad from any port in England or Wales without a pass under the Royal Signet and Sign Manual or under the hand and seal of one of the Secretaries of State, unless they be officers, soldiers and recruits for the forces in Holland or Flanders. These must produce a pass from the Generalissimo or General. Customs and port officers to take notice of this.

Same. Deposition of Charles Goring.

In November last was at Portsmouth taking care of plundered goods. One day got to Gosport with difficulty, owing to rough weather. Dined there with Sir George Parker, Mr. Culliford, a Custom officer at Southampton, and two other gentlemen from the Custom House at London, who were to assist us to take care of the Queen's duty. Mr. Culliford informed us that one Captain Coshart was in the next room, that his keeper Jackson had left him there, and that Culliford desired the captain might dine with us.* We agreed. Before we went to dinner, Jackson came in and told us he was going with a warrant to the Governor of Portsmouth for M. De Le Agra. I said I thought it very improper of Jackson to carry Coshart into a garrison and especially into the Governor's house, and that he had been guilty of great neglect of his duty in relation to one Lewis de Lot, that he [Jackson] had given in contradictory evidence to what he had sworn in order to the condemnation of a prize, which was like to create a lawsuit between the Lord High Admiral and the Prize Office, and that I had already complained to the Governor of him. He then desired Coshart might stay with us, and that he would be back in half an hour. He never came back. Coshart could speak no English and I no French, but Culliford told me he was very unwilling to be left alone, and desired to go over the water with us to be delivered to Jackson or the town major. We went over (other details). Coshart was taken care of that night by the town major and delivered back next day.

* The "he's" and "hims" are very complicated in this document. I think the sense given is right.

The Marquis de la Gallissonnière to [Nottingham].

I send enclosed from my correspondents in London, from which you will see that we can get no money. We shall be in great want, having hitherto lived at our own expense, and had nothing from the Queen since we have been prisoners at war, and do not know how we can live if we cannot be helped by our friends at home. Pray present this to the Queen, that the bankers of London may be allowed to help us.

P. 1. (Hol.) French. Endd. in Warre’s hand. S.P. Dom., Naval 118, 45. Enclosing:—

A. Couuren [sic] and others to the Marquis de la Gallissonnière.

We have long been ordered to pay you 200 guineas by M. De Menues’ [?] order, he having it from M. de Vanoles, the same to M. Sosel [Sorel] and 4,000 francs to the Marquis de Camilly, by order of M. Bernard. We are sure you want the money which, at another time, we should have paid at once; but we hesitate to pay at a time of difficulty and danger. We should have to be reimbursed by drawing on Paris, and if we did this, should incur the charge of corresponding with France. We desire to be of service to everybody, and especially to persons of your merit, who are in trouble, but we cannot offend the Government. This is to you and the other gentlemen.

E. Dummer to Same.

The following is a record of the voyage of the Bridgman:—

She left the Needles on 22 October, 1702, and arrived at Barbados 18 November.
She left Barbados 20 November, and arrived at Antegoa 24 November.
She left Antegoa 26 November, and arrived at Monserat 27 November.
She left Monserat 28 November, and arrived at Nevis 28 November.
1703.
She left Nevis 29 November, and arrived at St. Christopher's the same day.
She left St. Christopher's 1 December, and arrived at Jamaica 6 December.
She left Jamaica 15 December, and arrived at Falmouth 2 February, 1703.
The total is 3 months and 13 days, and the captain thinks that but for an interruption at Jamaica and some difficulty with a privateer, he would have saved 12 days. He has not lost a man, but had hard weather coming into the Channel.

Josiah Burchett to the Commissioners for Sick and Wounded.
Yours of the 13th, enclosing that of your officer at Yarmouth. As there is no means of transporting the prisoners there to Dover, apply to Lord Secretary Nottingham for the Queen's order to the magistrates at Yarmouth and elsewhere to receive the prisoners into the county jails.

Peter Stanley, Marshal for Prisoners at War, to the Secretary to Same.
Yours of the 11th, with an order from the Board for securing Sutton. I applied to the Mayor who, with Dr. Cropp and Mr. Cornelius, committed him to prison. He swore he was no party to Latouche's and Coshart's going away, and that he had no money from them. The magistrates did not think it well to rely on a prisoner's evidence, as this might encourage them to give false evidence, and also the prisoners might have been actuated by malice, as they were more strictly confined than they had been for some time. Pray let me know if Sutton may be admitted to bail. I think if he had been guilty he would have confessed. Coshart and Latouch used to get their money from M. De veale, a French merchant in this town.

15 Feb. 15
Oxford.
Count de Mornay to the Commissioners for Sick and Wounded.
Yours of the 12th. If things are ordered as you have directed, the French prisoners would be very wrong in complaining as they have done, and still do. You tell me that you only receive into your fleet Protestants who have certificates and present themselves. This does not agree with what M. de la Gallissonnière and I hear [to the effect] that a French minister called Gogo visits the prisoners daily to try to get them to change their religion and to engage, offering them money, and that, on the day when the officers left for Farnham, there were four sailors and a soldier who agreed to do so.
If these poor men are offered money and liberty [on these terms] and at the same time kept in captivity, it is natural that many will become Protestants; and those who give them money can also give them certificates. Moreover, I do not see that you have any greater right over Protestants than over Catholics. Whatever faith they may believe, they are subjects of the King of France.

As for the complaints you make of the ill-treatment of English prisoners in France, and especially at Dunkirk, I have great difficulty in believing them, because the officer in command there is the most just and reasonable of men. I am very grateful for your suggestion as to my own exchange, and obliged for your offer; but the Queen has long said that she would not agree to particular exchanges until the whole question of exchange was regulated. Moreover, Lord Secretary Nottingham has asked me to ask for authority to treat for the cartel, and this will soon arrive, unless it be true, as I hear, that the Queen has instructed her Ambassador in Holland to treat for it. If that be so, and if exchanges are made man for man, according to rank, I gladly accept your offer, and pray you to remember it. Being the first taken, I am entitled, by the laws of war, to be first released. I shall rely on your justice.

Queen's command:—To give directions for allowing Captain Martin de Sansinenez [sic], who lately commanded a Spanish ship, and is now a prisoner at Southampton, to come up here with any three men of his company. Give these directions to Sir William Hodges, who answers for the said prisoners, or whom soever he shall appoint to attend you for the same.

General date, DOCUMENTS RELATING TO THE CASE OF JAMES MORRISSE.

16 Feb.

Petition to Nottingham of James Morrise, a young French Protestant, now prisoner at Plymouth, shewing that:—

He was born and bred a Protestant, as appears by annexed certificates. Was sent to San Domingo and, in his return, was captured in the Eagle of Nantes. Is anxious, with the consent of his mother and family, to stay in England for liberty of religion and to follow a trade.

Prays for release from prison.

Certificate by —— Hugueville [?] and others.

Morrisse was born and bred a Protestant, but, because of the persecution in France, could not there make a public profession of it. Relates his capture, "by God's providence," and desire of his mother and relatives that he should live in England and learn a trade.

Certificate by James de Joux and others.

By testimony of many refugees of Plymouth who knew Morrisse's family at Dieppe, they corroborate foregoing. They have seen Morrisse in prison and testify to his desire to remain in England.

Note by the Commissioners of Sick and Wounded.

They have no power to discharge French prisoners of war by reason only of their being Protestants, unless they are willing to serve in the Queen's Navy.

This concludes the documents relating to this case.

Desiring his presence in England. The Queen is considering many Irish matters in which he may be useful.

2. To Paul Methuen, jun.

I have spoken with the envoy of Portugal on his master's proposals, as they are now reduced. Details.

Yours, to January 28, I have read to the Queen. The answer of Genoa evades the point on which you were to press, i.e. that the Queen's enemies should not be supplied with ships or stores by Genoese subjects. If any of them do it, the Queen will resent it, for the State of Genoa should forbid it.
1703.

The Queen, I repeat, will not allow enemies' goods to be carried in Genoese ships. She welcomes the Genoese concession of magazines, but the Genoese consul says that salt will not be granted at less than the usual price, which, as you said, they had agreed to let us have at one-fifth thereof. Please explain this discrepancy.

BRIGADIER COLENBINE to WILLIAM BLATHWAYT.

The four transport ships carrying my regiment have not come down, though Captain Lyell tells me he gave the necessary orders and signals. All the officers were certainly on board before I left Portsmouth, and I do not know why they didn't sail. The seamen on the Three Pilgrims mutinied. I tried to inform Captain Lyell of the Resolution, but, before I got up with him, he was past the Narrows, and the tide so far spent he could not return, though he tried to; so all that could be done (the other ships being under sail and the wind making it impossible to go back) was to come on here and await those which have not come. I cannot understand why the others have not come, for, while speaking the Three Pilgrims, I saw them ready [details]. I hope those to blame will be punished, for we have lost time and the best wind that could blow.

COLONEL GIBSON to [SAME].

About a week ago M. Dutot [?], a French prisoner, now turned Protestant and married in Gosport (who escaped out of our town prison some months ago, as I informed the Commissioners of Sick and Wounded), came to me and asked for a warrant to arrest Captain Couchart [Coshart]. I said to him the Queen's proclamation was sufficient warrant, but, he insisting, I thought abundance of the law could not break the law, and gave him my warrant, as he was positive that he could find Coshart. He now comes back with a long story, which I enclose. I have no good opinion of this gentleman, and wish he were settled elsewhere.

1703.  [17 Feb.]  Robert Porteus to Nottingham.

One Richard Whitman, who is here to attest, informs me that he met Captain La Touche in the house of William Games, a victualler at Wapping Dock, on February 1, with a Mr. Morgin, who is a pretended husband to the ship that Captain Damper is going out in, and reports that he is a part owner of that ship. Knowing La Touche, Whitman asked him how he came out of prison. La Touche answered that he was cleared out and that Morgin was his friend. Details. Morgin knows where La Touche now is.

In answer to my questions, Whitman said he could not swear whether the person he had spoken to was La Touche or Captain Coshart, but knew that he was one who had been a prisoner at Southampton in December [1702] and was called a captain. Having taken steps [details] to get a description of La Touche, I tried on February 13 to find him, but could not identify him for certain, and they who were with him said they knew no man by [that?] name and asked what order I had to search. I therefore write to acquaint your honour with what I have heard; and, if the parties or party be arrested, hope I may have the bounty money promised in the Queen's proclamation.

17 Feb.  Colonel Gibson to [Same].

Yours of the 15th. Towards the end of November (I cannot give the day) I was at one of our coffee-houses in company with Dr. Sherrarde. The Town Major came to receive the word and orders for the night—it being about the time of shutting the gates. Before I gave him the word, he told me that Sir George Parker had brought over from Gosport M. Coshart to see M. D'Aligre, a prisoner then at the Town Major's house in custody; but that he [the Major] had not allowed them to meet till he had my consent. I objected, and said that if it were not out of respect to him I would confine Coshart and Jackson. The doctor was very much concerned, and sent for Jackson, then at Gosport. I told the Major to tell Sir George Parker that I would not comply with his desire, it being a thing I could not answer. The enclosed* shew the sequel, and I am sure Dr. Sherrarde and Sir G. Parker will both do me and the Town Major justice in this affair, if asked.

The enclosed, to the best of my knowledge, are matter of fact. Next morning Coshart was carried over to Gosport and delivered to the Marshal, and the Doctor knows best how he reprimanded him. I am sorry your lordship should have so much trouble in this affair, but I could not avoid it.

Same.  Robert Dalzell to [Same].

Yours of the 15th to the Lieutenant Governor [Gibson] says

* The following document may be one of these.
that you are informed that when Captain Coshart was brought over from Gosport by Sir George Parker and others he was delivered to me. What I can say on the matter is as follows:—About sunset on the day in question, at the usual time for firing the gun for shutting the gates, I was going towards the main guard, and found standing near it Sir George Parker, Mr. Goreing, and I think Mr. Bryan, with Lieutenant Foulks, of Colonel Holt’s regiment. The first three gentlemen belong to the prize office. Captain Coshart, whom I had never seen or spoken to before, was with them. The gentlemen had brought him over from Gosport to pay a visit to M. d’Aligre, a French prisoner of war, who was then detained at my house. Corroborates the foregoing as to the refusal of the Lieutenant-Governor [Gibson] and Commissioner [Dr. Sherard] to authorise the meeting between Coshart and D’Aligre. At the time when he was asked for leave, the Lieutenant Governor was at the Point Coffee House, and Parker &c. remained at Norris’ Coffee House. Proceeds:—The Lieutenant Governor told me to keep him [Coshart] till next morning in some proper place with two sentinels. When I delivered Coshart these orders, there were present Sir G. Parker, Mr. Goreing, Mr. Bryan, Lord Durzly, Major Lawrence, Lieutenant Foulks and many others. I refer for details to Major Lawrence’s letters of this date.

19 Feb. Memorandum by Sir G. Parker.

Some day in November last, after working at Portsmouth in connection with the landing of the Port St. Mary's plunder, I and some other gentlemen went to dine at Gosport. Before we sat down, Mr. Cullfort, an officer of Southampton, being in company with us, was alone in the next room, and desired to be admitted to dinner with us. We consented.

In the evening we were going over to Portsmouth, and he asked leave to come with us, as he was alone. He said he had come from Southampton with a design to wait upon some prisoners who were taken at Vigo. Details. When we landed at the "Pint a' Portsmouth" we met the Town Major, to whom I referred Captain Coshart for leave to see M. d'Alleger [D'Aligre]. I saw Coshart afterwards in the coffee-house, but do not know what became of him from that time to this.

To vindicate Major Dalliele from the suspicion of neglect, I beg to state what I saw in November last:—

As Major to Colonel Holt's regiment here, I have frequently had orders from Colonel Gibson to make detachments to convoy prisoners to Southampton. Amongst them was Coshart, whom I at first treated with the decency due to his appearance, but he soon "forfeited my condescension," and I had to give orders to the officers at Southampton to treat him strictly. Details. He made favour with his gaoler, who consented to many irregularities.

Confirms Colonel Gibson and Sir G. Parker [above at 17 and 19 February, 1703] as to the events before Coshart's escape. Proceeds:—After supper I took him to my lodging, had my field bed set up [for him] and never let him out of my sight till I sent him under an officer's guard to Jackson, his keeper.

The Queen approves the exchange of Captain William Hester, who commanded the Diamond galley, taken in November last by a French privateer, and now at Dunkirk, for Mathew du Prey, master of the Bonheur, lately taken by her Majesty's ship Chatham and now a prisoner at Plymouth. WARRANT by the DUKE OF MARLBOROUGH.

Appointing Peter Cotter kettle-drummer to the train of artillery commanded by Colonel Holcraft Blood. Pay 3s. a day, as from 18 February, 1703.

ROYAL WARRANT to the MASTER-GENERAL of the ORDNANCE.

It is for the good of our service that a true state and account of the present condition of all our garrisons, forts and block-houses should be reported to us. No survey has been made of them for a long time, so that their condition, and the amount of repair needed to fit them for defence of the realm, “against foreign invasions or other hostile attempts that may be made against our State and Government,” cannot be known. We authorise and desire you, taking the assistance of such officers, engineers and clerks as you think fit, to make such a particular survey of “all our said garrisons, castles, forts and blockhouses situate upon the coasts, harbours, maritime places and frontiers of this our kingdom and town of Berwick-on-Tweed.” Consider and certify how many of them are “useful and of such defence as may make them capable of rendering us considerable service at least of such importance as may countervail the charge of their respective entertainments and supplies, how many ([because] the sea hath forsaken them or in respect of any other important defects in the situation, form, materials, endowments or other remarkable decays) are become unserviceable and unfit to be maintained” as being too chargeable to us; how many should be maintained with a small number of men or otherwise; and of these “to take due consideration of their fortifications and works and of all annoyances which may make them subject to the danger of a surprise.” Return an estimate of the cost of necessary repairs and of what entertainment (issued out of what fund and upon what consideration) has been allowed for their support. Say whether such consideration still exists and what change has occurred since the allowance was first made.

If you cannot yourself undertake this survey, you may depute such of our principal officers of ordnance as you approve to do it, acting under your instructions, under which they shall make a detailed return of the state of the fortifications, which you shall send to us. You, or those under your orders, shall make a return also of all the ordnance, platforms, carriages and habiliments of war charged out of our magazines and remaining in any of our said forts, of the defects of such provisions and their need of repair. You, or they, shall also report what ordnance &c. is necessary in each of these forts, whether the officers, gunners &c. that receive our pay are capable of discharging their respective charges, what officers and men are allowed for each fort, at what pay, what repairs are needed for the quarters of such officers and men, what encroachments, if any, have been made to the prejudice of the forts, what officers and men were allowed, originally and now, for each fort,* whether all such officers and men are in residence, and generally all particulars which you think conducing to our service touching the said castles &c.

Lastly, have the remainder of stores in each fort examined and get certificates from the person in command of each [details], how their stores of all kinds have been expended or saved according to our instructions for preventing waste. Where particular commanders have been wasteful, certify their names and defaults, and do not discharge them on their accounts till you hear from us or the Privy Council.

* The warrant repeats itself here.
All officers, gunners &c. in forts are commanded to assist and obey you in this service.

EDWARD MORGAN to NOTTINGHAM.

Promises to reveal secrets and find out where certain persons are. Proceeds:—Your lordship can see that my intention was real, seeing otherwise I had not gone near La Touche nor troubled myself about it, knowing the consequences of such affairs. If the management of the affair had been left in my hands, I might by to-morrow have been able to give you some account of "Coshar." It was through me that the information about La Touche reached you. Others are trying to defraud me of the benefits of the Queen’s proclamation. Details.

24 Feb. CAPTAIN [Sir] THOMAS HARLOW, commanding H.M.S. Grafton, to [NOTTINGHAM].

I sent to Barnstaple and Falmouth for volunteers. Five volunteers were brought from Falmouth yesterday. My master, mate and midshipman were ill-treated at Falmouth. The Mayor refused to enter any man he brought and suffered the people to “palt” [pelt] them through the town when they beat up for volunteers, put those he had entertained in prison, and afterwards sent them on board the ships he was concerned in. If officers are so treated by magistrates, we shall have an ill time of it, and of what use is her Majesty’s proclamation, and what use is our expense if they “banter with the authority.”

I send the names of the men enclosed. He had no press-warrant with him. I thought they might have interest enough, being both of that country, to raise volunteers, “but in this, as in other matters, meet disappointments by a disaffected sort of people.”

ROYAL WARRANT TO THE ATTORNEY OF SOLICITOR GENERAL.

TO PREPARE A BILL &C. TO PASS THE GREAT SEAL INCORPORATING THE BAILIFFS, ALDERMEN, BURGESSSES AND COMMONALTY OF GREAT YARMOUTH IN NORFOLK, AND THE TOWN OF SOUTH TOWN IN SUFFOLK, BY THE NAME OF THE MAYOR, ALDERMEN, BURGESSSES AND COMMONALTY OF THE BURGH OF GREAT YARMOUTH, IN ORDER TO ENABLE THEM TO EXECUTE THE POWERS GIVEN TO THAT CORPORATION BY AN ACT OF PARLIAMENT PASSED IN 1699, FOR MAINTAINING THE PIERS AND HAVEN THERE. THE GRANT SHALL CONTAIN ALL THE PRIVILEGES MENTIONED IN THE ANNEXED SCHEDULE, AND THE PERSONS Whose NAMES ARE THEREIN MENTIONED WITH ALL OTHER USUAL PRIVILEGES.

SCHEDULE.

THE PETITIONERS WERE, BY A CHARTER OF 1668, UNITED INTO ONE CORPORATION BY THE NAMES OF THE BAILIFFS, ALDERMEN, BURGESSSES AND COMMONALTY OF THE BURGH OF GREAT YARMOUTH IN NORFOLK.

BY A CHARTER OF 22 JULY, 1608, THEY HAVE TWENTY-FOUR ALDERMEN. THEY DESIRE THAT AS THESE DIE THEY MAY BE REDUCED TO EIGHTEEN, AND EVER AFTER REMAIN AT THAT NUMBER. THEY DESIRE THAT THEIR COMMON COUNCILMEN WHO, BY A CHARTER OF 8 JANUARY, 1664, ARE FORTY-EIGHT, BE REDUCED BY DEATH TO THIRTY-SIX, AND KEPT EVER AFTER AT THAT NUMBER.

THAT IN CASE ANY MAYOR REFUSE TO SERVE, OR BE REMOVED, THE SENIOR, OR ANY WILLING, ALDERMAN WHO IS A JUSTICE OF THE PEACE HAVE POWER TO CALL A COMMON COUNCIL OF THE BOROUGH, GIVING THREE DAYS' NOTICE TO EACH RESIDENT MEMBER, AND THAT SUCH COUNCIL PROCEED TO THE ELECTION OF A NEW MAYOR.

By former charters the Bailiffs, Recorder and one other man learned in the law, chosen by them at Michaelmas, were Justices for the year ensuing. They desire that instead of this, the seven senior aldermen of the said borough, now being, viz., Benjamin England, Peter Caulier, Sam Fuller, Nathaniel Symonds, Thomas Godfrey, Antony Ellis, sen., and Gabriel Ward, and every Mayor, from his entering and during office, and every Mayor, or ex-Mayor who is still an alderman, and every High Steward, Recorder and Under Steward, while he holds his office, shall be Justices of the Peace for the said borough; and that they or any three of them (of whom the Mayor or Deputy Mayor, Recorder or under steward shall be always one) be justices to meet, call and adjourn any Sessions [details]; and that all writs, precepts &c. of the Sessions be directed to and executed by the officers of the said borough without any warrant from the Sheriff or Coroner of Norfolk or Suffolk in that behalf to be directed according to the charter of Queen Elizabeth.

By former charters, the Justices of the Peace for Norfolk were prohibited from exercising jurisdiction in Great Yarmouth, and by the charter of 1668 the King granted to Little Yarmouth all the privileges which Great Yarmouth formerly enjoyed. They desire that the authority of the said Justices of the Peace of Great Yarmouth may be extended to Little Yarmouth, and that the Justices of Suffolk may be prohibited from officiating there.

They desire that each Mayor-elect, before he enter his office, take the oath of office before the seven senior aldermen or any two of them; and that all other officers of the borough take the oath before entering on their offices [details].

The Commissioners of Sick and Wounded to [Nottingham].

Send list of prisoners, and an extract of a letter from their officer at Weymouth.

A. Number of prisoners of war in custody on 25 February, 1703.

The total is 3,714. Number at each of the various ports given [see above, pp. 575, 596].

B. Charles Taver, surgeon at Weymouth, to the Secretary to the Commissioners of Sick and Wounded.

The Conqueror, privateer, has just come in here and has brought in a French prize of 26 tons and nine men, laden with wine and brandy. She belonged to “Deip” and was coming from Bordeaux. I learn from them only that Bordeaux is full of soldiers and a revolt apprehended there. Soldiers are being impressed night and day; but they believe the Grand Fleet will not come out this year. "The master is, as they call him, a new convert, and he tells me that certainly the French King hath an intent upon Holland, and he adds that about 60,000 militia men are raised at the country's charge," and that Chateaurenought is still at Paris. They complain of an extraordinary poverty. That is all at present.

26 Feb. Whitehall.

[Richard Warre] to Mr. Burt.

Lord Secretary Nottingham directs me to say that although La Touche, who made his escape from Southampton, is now committed to Newgate, he thinks he should be so far considered a prisoner of war as to have the same allowance for his subsistence which he had at Southampton, to commence from the time of his commitment (19 February). Acquaint the Commissioners with it. If they desire further directions they will be sent, "but my Lord is now gone in haste to the House."

1. To Sir Thomas Harlow, Captain of the Grafton.

Your complaints of the Mayor of Falmouth have reached me through the Prince’s Council, but must be corroborated on oath before the Queen can take any step. Send depositions in support by those who have knowledge of these proceedings.

2. To the Mayor of Falmouth.

Complaint has been made that you discourage volunteers and allowed some officers of the Grafton to be ill-treated when they beat up for them, and imprisoned some who had listed themselves. The Queen desires your account of this matter before she acts.

3. To the Lord Treasurer.

Kirby [Northants].  I beg your lordship's favour for the enclosed petition of the juratts of Guernsey, which will be presented by the bailiff, Sir Edmund Andros. The old court is ruinous and useless and the hired room in which justice is now administered is so small that it will not hold those who have to attend there, and many of those attending have been almost suffocated. The cost of repairing the old court is trifling; but the inhabitants are so divided amongst themselves that they cannot agree on anything. This and other necessary charges might be easily paid by raising 2 sols. per pot on all wine sold by retail there and 3 or 4 sols. on brandy; but whoever suggested such a course would immediately be met by factious opposition unless it is countenanced or commanded by the Queen.
       It would be more acceptable if the Queen would add something to it out of her bounty, though it should be only some part of the duty on prizes brought in there.

       A. Petition to the Queen of the Lieutenant, Bailiff and Jurats of the Royal Court of Jersey, shewing that:—

          Their Court of Justice is so old and decayed as to be dangerous to the petitioners and other inhabitants. As there is no prison in the island, debts cannot be enforced nor the sentences of the Court duly executed.

Sick and Wounded Office.
The Commissioners of Sick and Wounded to Nottingham.
Since we heard that her Majesty did not approve of Lyndhurst as a place to keep prisoners in, we have looked out for other places to which they could be moved from Southampton. We found a house near Winchester with an old chapel attached, which was formerly used for the same purpose, and agreed with the present proprietor (who was only a small time in it) for it for 50l. a year, and should have laid out 200l. in fitting it up and strengthening it for the service, “but the house and chapel belonging to one Mr. Fines, a Fellow of Winchester College, he will not consent to our having it for this use.” All, therefore, that we can do to gratify the inhabitants of Southampton, who complain of the number of prisoners there, is to move some of them to Farnham, where we have made provision for about 160 more.
We have also looked about for a prison near Plymouth, and have got an estimate of 600l. for building Trymenton [Trematon] Castle for this service. We have laid this before his Royal Highness.

2 Mar.
Plymouth.
Brigadier V. Colbine to [Same].
I do not pretend to judge whether the taking of Placentia and destruction of the French fishery in Newfoundland is important, but I must tell your lordship that a regular fortification of four bastions with a fort on an ascent is not to be taken without men and cannon. This made me insist that my stay in the West Indies might be regulated, and no draft made to complete the three regiments there till I had taken the place. I have often pressed for the ten 24 pounders and carriages designed for that expedition. I have waited till Admiral Craden [Graydon] came, and daily hoped to get the cannon and other things to enable me to do my part by taking that place.
If it is still desired to take Placentia, the thing can be done by sending some ships to Newfoundland to meet me there, which will prevent the French from relieving it and bring me what necessaries I want.
P.S.—I want the ten 24 pounders or land carriages to take the twelve iron 24 pounders, having to carry the cannon three miles at least up an ascent (if the plan which you gave me is true), four gunners with planks to make a platform, and blinds for the battery; and “12 tinkers mortars with shells conform to their calibear.”

ROYAL WARRANT to the ATTORNEY or SOLICITOR GENERAL.

COUNT DE MORNAY to [M. DE PONTCHARTRAIN].

I have had yours of February 8 and have written again to Lord Secretary Nottingham. Details.

The Commissioners of Sick and Wounded have replied to my complaints that, on investigation, they find the complaints of the French prisoners were without foundation, that, if there had been many deaths, this was because it had been necessary to keep the prisoners more closely than before, contrary to the Commissioners' desire, because more than 100 had escaped from the places in which they had been put during their illness; that the English in France were worse treated than the French in England, and were, in some cases, dying of hunger and kept in such places that half of them had to lie down to enable the other half to sleep, whilst in England, even in the most confined places, the prisoners had places in which to sleep and walk.

I answered that I was sure the orders of the Commissioners had been as they stated, but that it was to be feared that those who had to distribute food did not do so fairly, and mentioned the many complaints I had received from prisoners at Plymouth &c. [Details.] I also complained, as you directed, of the attempts made to proselytise the prisoners and to induce them to take service in the English fleet. They replied that, far from persuading to such a change they had actually refused [to engage] many who had publicly abjured the Roman religion, and that they only engaged such as produced certificates from French clergymen of their having been brought up in the Protestant religion. They made a similar charge against the French officers in France, to which I answered that no foreigner could be embarked on a French ship without an express order from the King; and that I knew the intendants of ports had orders not to allow it. I had no answer to my complaint that French prisoners had been ill-treated by an English officer at Southampton. As to a cartel, the Commissioners say that when I have power to deal for both French and Spanish prisoners they will give orders for an attempt to arrange all points. I await that power and will communicate it to them.

We have been moved here, and the town is our prison. The Sieur Cochard escaped from Southampton with La Touche, a privateersman of Brest, since which they have transferred to Farnham all the officers of the frigates who were at Southampton as well as those of merchantmen and privateers. The Sieur du Rodon has, at my request, been left behind to distribute their most pressing necessities to the crews, who were mostly without shirts or shoes. I have sent 55l.£ to M. du Rodon for the crews of the Gracieuse and Trompette, and other vessels [details], and for 35 prisoners taken at Vigo. I have exact lists.

I have not been in London for six weeks, and do not know how the prisoners are, but the Commissioners tell me they have orders to treat them well unless complaints from France caused that order to be changed. They asked me to tell you this.

propose made by your leave [details] for the exchange of man season for a man of some fishermen from Rye, Deal, Haythe, Hastings and Folkestone. He says the Court of France have agreed and accordingly does assure that whatever shall be sent over the same number and quality will be returned. He sends a list of in all thirty-seven men [details], whom he desires returned, particularly John Blard, an old fishermaster of seventy, and sends a list of those who will be given for them—in all twenty-nine men. These, he says, are all the English fishermen that are at Calais and Boulogne; but, if we send over all those he requires he will make up the difference with other Englishmen. Details.

Captain Gibson suggests that this offer should be accepted, and M. Pigault adds: If your Court would let all the fishermen be free, the French Court will tell their privateers not to meddle with yours.

The enclosed came last night by a boy that belongs to George Chapman and John Hobday's boat's crew, landed out of a French shallopp between Brockman's Barn and Hythe. As there was one among the rest directed to you I thought it well to send you the whole packet to be laid before the Secretary of State or otherwise as you think fit.

Josiah Burchett to Richard Warre.

Instructions are preparing for the Severn and Scarborough to proceed to India in the service of the United East India Companies. The Companies desire that the captains of these vessels may have orders to consult constantly with the Governor and Council at Bombay or any other Governors and Councils for England in India, and to proceed as, after such consultation, may be thought most advisable and as the case may require. The Prince fears that "such a latitude may occasion the acting something that may bring her Majesty into a war with the Grand Mogul or the Princes in those parts." I am, therefore, to send you a copy of a clause that may be necessary to restrain those captains in that particular, to be laid before Secretary Nottingham. If he has no objection, kindly let me know, so that the instructions may go to the Commander in Chief of the two ships.

Enclosing:

NOTTINGHAM'S LETTERS.

1. To the Commissioners of Sick and Wounded.

I send extract from a deposition of her Majesty's Consul in the Canaries relating the barbarous treatment of Richard Jones, an English subject who was captured when a passenger on a brigantine by a French Satia.* He died shortly afterwards of his stripes. Write to Count de Mornay and complain of this cruelty and demand the punishment of the French officer.

The Mayor of Chichester has imprisoned three persons who, when arrested, admitted that they were escaped prisoners and trying to get over to France. I have ordered him to give them to your officers. Those who have once escaped should be kept with "more severe care" than others.

Their names were Jacques Bachelett, Noell Fautrell and Nicholas Boyaux.

Also note of the deposition of John Dussell, master of the Logwood Merchant, bound from Cork for Jamaica with beef, butter &c., and taken and carried to Teneriffe by the French on 16 October last.

2. To the Same.

I send a list of French fishermen prisoners at Dover, with the names of some English fishermen now prisoners in France, for whom they will be exchanged. Send them by Captain Gibson, and, as there are more French prisoners than English, the difference may be made up by the French returning the lieutenant and boat's crew that were driven on the French coast this winter, and, if these are not sufficient, by such others as may be most proper. If there are any other French prisoners here the Queen will release them in return for the like number and quality of English prisoners from France. Also note of enclosed lists.

* A fast pinnace; see the New English Dictionary, s.v. "Settee." 1703.

3. To the Mayor of Chichester.

Consequential on the first letter to the Commissioners of Sick and Wounded above, at this date. To deliver his prisoners to the Commissioners' officer.

P.S.—To examine strictly, and report how these men escaped.

Documents relating to the Case of Captain Martin Laycock.

Note of proceedings in the House of Commons.

A petition of Captain Martin Laycock was presented praying that his services and sufferings might be considered and that he might be put on the list of broken officers to have half-pay.

Order. Petition granted. Signed by Paul Jodrell, Clerk of the House of Commons. Note that there is due for the said half-pay from 18 April, 1699, to 1 December, 1702, at 4s. a day, 264l. 8s. od.

Captain Laycock to Hedges.

Relates his grievances. The Queen lately promised his wife that she should be relieved and posted, and told her to send in a petition to remind her Majesty of it. Proceeds:—My wife has been too sick to petition, and I got a poor woman to hand in a petition at the Council Board. It was returned to me with directions to send it to the Secretary of State. I pray for leave to lay a scheme before the House of Commons whereby several millions will be brought into the nation and relieve taxation. It has been shewn to several members, who advise that I should first get my liberty and lay it before the House in person. Pray lay this petition before the Queen and let the bearer know when she may wait on you for an answer.

Petition of Laycock, a close prisoner in the "Knight Marshal prison" in Southwark, to the Queen, shewing that:—

Petitioner was arrested by an order from the Green Cloth in St. James' Park on July 9 last. He has since been a prisoner in the Knight Marshal's prison at Southwark, and has been in great want. Has been ten weeks in bed with wounds and incurred great expenses in getting them cured. He received these in the nation's service. Raised men, fed them when no money was coming, and waited several years to establish his pension. He received neither small moneys* nor the pension voted him by Parliament,† nor payment of his pay or out of pocket expenses. Is very poor and his family perishing. To enable him to show how seven or eight millions of money may be brought into the nation:—

Prays that he be established in half-pay from the time he was Captain Laycock to Hedges.

Objects to being referred to Ireland for redress. Is not an Irishman, and hopes he may have relief in England. His wife is very ill, and will perish if not relieved, and he must stay with her. Prays that his petition may be laid before the Queen, and his wife’s afflictions, which are worse than his, relieved.

Same to Same.

I have not as yet the Queen’s answer, but am tossed to and fro between England and Ireland. If, as I hear, two regiments are being raised for Ireland, I hope I may be posted now. I am not like the officers that threw down their commissions rather than go to the West Indies. I want only to get there, and dare say that I can do her Majesty more service there than any officer in her service. I will, if allowed, send a petition and will suffer death if I am not several millions in her Majesty’s interests.

Pray let me know what I have to depend on, or I will send to the Emperor’s ambassador or Dutch Envoy for employment before the campaign begins. I have seen much service.

Same to Same.

Prays for relief and to be posted in some one of the new regiments of foot for the raising of which, he hears, commissions are being issued. Is penniless and cannot buy bread for his family. Other details.

This concludes the documents relating to this case.

Colonel Collier to [Nottingham].

I have liberated the Esperance de Derniville. One, Manwaring, who is appointed here by Mr. Dod to take the Lord High Admiral’s part of the prizes, objected, and said the boat was condemned and to be “apprized”; so I had her “apprized,” and her “appraisement” was 30 livers, and the master has given security to pay the sum if due. The ship was seized long before Manwaring arrived here; so I think his claim bad, but shall do nothing till I have your orders.

Hedges' Letters.

1. To Captain Gifford.

Directions have been given to the Governors of the Post Office to deliver three posts a week in the evenings at Portsmouth, which is for her Majesty's service. Thank you for remembering about the wine. Hope you will soon get some good from the prizes.

2. To the Postmasters General.

Gives the directions mentioned in foregoing. Details.

3. To Baron Price.

Samuel Bugler, John and William Barber and William Warren, having been concerned in the killing of George Jey, William Warren confessed and discovered the rest, and several gentlemen of the country desire that his evidence should be admitted against the rest. At their desire, I tell you so. They are to be tried before you at the next assizes at Dorchester.

4. To Baron de Schutz.

Sends for his special care and conveyance an autograph letter from the Queen to the Electress Dowager of Brunswick [Hanover].

Colonel Thomas Saunderson to John Ellis.

Asks that the three commissions now passing to officers may be dated 25 December; otherwise the officers in question will suffer by being respited on the muster from that day.

Copy of a Letter signed R.S., and dated as in margin.

It is very strange that after persuading Holland to forbid all commerce with France, one Gipson should come upon the Exchange and tell the merchants there that he is going to France, and desire their commissions and letters, that he shall "keep a public office in Waghorn's coffee-house to receive all people that hath any commission to give him, and that this place should, in the face of a Government, be crowded with people sending messages and letters thither."

It is strange that, when we desire the Dutch not to exchange prisoners taken at sea but in concert with us, this Gipson shall declare instructions he hath to treat for a general exchange and an order on commission from the Prince to exchange fifty now." How this sounds on the exchange you may guess.

Last war you had officers to prevent corresponding when the commerce of letters through Holland was not forbid; and this war you have none.

The commanders for exchange of prisoners were not allowed to go ashore during last war, and now you make them negociators. When these strange abuses are rectified you shall hear of them from ______.

Admiralty Office.

Inform Lord Secretary Nottingham that the Commissioners of Victuals have been ordered to take steps to prepare a supply of oil and wine at Genoa or Livorno sufficient for 20,000 men for two months.

I have just now stopped a Danes’ ship bound for St. Martin’s in France, laden with deals, Newcastle coals and some provisions. I desire instructions as to keeping her or letting her go.

Same. Same from Captain Cock to his brother, dated 10 March, 1703.

I wish they were again put in mind of the dismal state of the poor men here. It is so miserable that notwithstanding a thousand solicitations by me, we must inevitably lose more men by sickness than we did in battle, and they were very nearly eighty killed and wounded by our last computation. Should the cartel not be settled, I hope some way will be found to write to the Court of France and complain of this treatment. They get but 2 ounces of cheese and a little bread per day. Seventy or eighty are kept in a small room, “where half stand while half lie.” I believe also the [French] officers are not confined, as I have told you I am, to a house. Pray inform me on this.

1. To the Lord Treasurer.

The Queen is anxious to do something for Michael Arnold, whose petition is enclosed, and desires you to give him some post in the Revenue.

Also note. Arnold’s petition set out that his father was brewer to King Charles II and King James II, till chosen Member of Parliament for Westminster; that petitioner then filled his place till King James went away, and that then his father "was barbarously used by the name of Jacobite &c." His father was confined to his house for his own protection, "and died of grief." Petitioner was forced to leave his trade to his utter ruin, and lost above 200l. in beer and casks unpaid for in Whitehall cellar. No trade and seven children. Prays for help.

2. To Mr. Sansome.

Yours re the two French prisoners has been sent to the Commissioners for Sick and Wounded &c. Your letter about the landing of men from a French sloop near Seaford seems to require further directions from the Commissioners of Customs, to their coast officers with a view to preventing such landings and the carrying of letters and goods, which seems to be their object in thus venturing to come ashore. The officers at Chichester and Bourne did their duty well, and deserve encouragement at a time when it is so necessary they should do it.

NOTTINGHAM'S LETTERS.

The Queen approves the proposed addition to the instructions to the commander of her ships going to the East with the United East India Company's ships.

2. To Edward Southwell.*

There was an Irish ship at Rochelle on 14 February last, which passed for a Swedish ship. She may be one of those whose names I gave you, which "do use the French trade." It would be very fit to examine such ships as have lately come into the ports of Ireland, or may soon come hither (for this was designed to return to Ireland), whence they came; that this practice may be stopped.

The COMMISSIONERS of Sick and WOUNDED to NOTTINGHAM.

We send an extract from our agent at Plymouth re escape of prisoners. His Royal Highness informs us that he does not think it expedient to incur the charge of fitting up Trymenton [Trematon] Castle. We also send a total of the prisoners at war now in custody.

A. Kym[pton] Mabbott [as above] to the Commissioners of Sick and Wounded.

Seventeen of the prisoners taken by the Medway escaped by breaking a large hole in the wall of Cockside Prison and wading away to dry land through mud when the tide was out. They then divided. Some went to a small village, where we took them, and they say that six others were resolved to go to West Chester and not to travel except at night, and the other seven were to go aboard a Dutch privateer.

I am searching for them. Some of them are Irishmen, but speak French well enough to pass for Frenchmen. I wish Captain Good had called for them as the Board writ. I wish I had order to fit up Trimont [Trematon] Castle for them,

MEMORIAL by PRINCE GEORGE OF DENMARK to the QUEEN in COUNCIL.*

As the six marine regiments are designed only for the service of her Majesty at sea and are reckoned as part of the 40,000 men given by Parliament for that purpose, and as several inconveniences have arisen in manning the fleet by reason of those regiments not being complete and under the same command with the rest of the men employed there, I propose to the Queen that the said regiments be put entirely and immediately under my particular care, the better to carry on the public service, and that Colonel Seymour’s regiment be made one of them instead of that under Colonel Harry Mordaunt, now at the [Channel] Islands.

COLONEL COLLIER to NOTTINGHAM.

The French merchant who came here [see above, p. 345] says he is a Protestant. He prays that his attempt to trade here may not be made known to the French prisoners here, as trading with the enemy is severely punished [details] in France.

He further offered to bring me news from time to time from St. Malo’s to any rock I might appoint here; and only asked that whenever he brought such news he might be allowed to carry back, for ready money, tobacco, stockings and drapery.
He said he could only offer his oath and bond for this; and, in answer to my warning, said he could never be discovered, for that he would write nothing until he was on a rock near this island, and, then, would write in cypher only known to him and me.
He could easily obtain the large quantity of tobacco and drapery, which he would get here from a merchant who would not discover him, "provided I would wink at it." I said I would consider it and send him back to his confinement.

He has some credit in France. I desire to know how I shall answer him.

1. To the Lord Treasurer.

Queen's command: To give the necessary directions on a paper sent by the Bishop of London and enclosed.

Enclosed was a memorial from the inhabitants of New York asking for a grant of a little farm adjoining the town of New York "for a glebe to the Rectory of Trinity Church, newly erected by the inhabitants in the same town," and to build a school upon, and half an acre of ground lying just before the church to build upon it a house for the Minister.

An escheat in West Chester in the province of New York of 100 acres belonging formerly to one William for a glebe to the church there settled.

All this is humbly requested by Lord Cornbury and the inhabitants.

Command:—Provide an extra ship to transport the soldiers to the West Indies if you can, to avoid unhealthy crowding. If you cannot provide one before the first favourable wind, they must go as they are. The Queen will have no further delay.

GEORGE CLARKE to HEDGES.

Sends enclosed.
Enclosing:—

The Navy Board to [George Clarke].

As directed by his Royal Highness we have perused the extracts of letters which came from the Queen's Envoy Extraordinary in Sweden and Mr. Jackson, her Majesty's Commissary at Stockholm, touching the procuring of masts for the Navy, and also that from my Lord Raby about supplying the Navy with tar and pitch from Queenbrough.

For the first two we have always desired that an open trade be obtained with Sweden for masts, tar, pitch and other naval commodities as formerly, so as the English merchants might be able to supply the nation in general as well as the Navy in particular with the said commodities in the customary methods; but as her Majesty was imposed upon last year in the tar and pitch, so the King of Sweden's letter to the College of Admiralty seems to be worded with such caution as that it may be doubted whether those gentlemen will succeed in their endeavours.

Masts from 6 to 15 or 16 hands have usually been had from Norway more cheaply than from anywhere else. It is believed they can still be had thence, so that only those of greater sizes need be looked for. We do not see how to get any; for when we lately named a day to treat for large masts "from Poland, Sweden, New England or any other country," nobody came to offer us any.

Those mentioned in Mr. Robinson's letters to be at Riga are of very proper sizes for the Navy. Those at Danzig will also be useful. He should encourage not only the sending of those parcels, but also of other consignments of the largest size. Those mentioned to be at Gottenburgh are no larger than what we already have from Norway. Any of them which are of fifteen hands or more would be very acceptable to the Navy at this time.

Mr. Jackson says he has sent a person into the country to look for large masts, but we do not know if he will be able to find any, if the King of Sweden will allow the export, or to what port they will come if they come at all. In case he does succeed in getting any, we think he should have particular instructions not to send any here which are not sizeable, sound and good, and to see that the freight be as cheap as possible by bringing them over in ships which bring over iron and other goods. In the management of this much money may, we are told, be saved. If thought fit he should be instructed to draw bills on this Board for his payments and to take vouchers for all of them.

As for Lord Raby's letter about supplying the Navy with tar and pitch from Queenbrough, we think it very desirable that this source should be kept open in order that we may not be so much dependent on Sweden. To that end his lordship should be acquainted with the prices usually given in Sweden, which are (as we are informed) 6l. 10s. 6d. a last for tar and 11l. 10s. 0d. a last for pitch. Each last contains twelve barrels, and each barrel of tar thirty-six gallons; and each barrel of pitch to be of three hundredweight—for his lordship's better government in promoting the same. Finding that Mr. Gould and Mr. Hall are better able to advise on this than we are, we desired them to wait on Mr. Secretary, and beg you to communicate all to his Royal Highness.

The Commissioners of Sick and Wounded to Nottingham.

We send, as directed, an abstract of the complaints of the English prisoners in France with, opposite each item, an account of how well our French prisoners are treated. These complaints are based on the sworn report of a master of a ship lately escaped from Dinant, or on other trustworthy information.

If the French are treating our men so in order to force the Queen to agree to a cartel, we think the French gentlemen at Oxford should be told that unless their prisoners are better treated they must expect, without distinction, to be dealt with in the same manner.

Abstract and Account as in the covering letter.

1. (a) In France. The French King's pretended allowance for prisoners of war at Dinant is 5 sous per diem, but instead thereof they have victuals provided by the Keeper, who cheats them of half. Those few who have the privilege to get money receive only 3 sous (2d.) a day.

In Dunkirk the prisoners have only about 2 oz. of stinking cheese and a little bread.

The prisoners at Ostend speak well of their treatment, but have only 3 sous a day for subsistence.

(b) In England. Her Majesty's allowance for the subsistence of commissioned officers of the French ships is 12d. a day, for commissioned officers of privateers 6d., and for common seamen 5d. In one place, pending the fixing of coppers (for cooking meat), the prisoners were kept on bread, butter and cheese, and had also 1½d. a day in money. The established allowance at all ports is now—

Sundays, Tuesdays and Thursdays—meat.
Mondays and Fridays—wheat or pease.
Wednesdays and Saturdays—butter and cheese.

2. (a) In France. At Dinant they have no straw, but lie on the damp ground, where also the vault belonging to the prison breaks in upon them, which is an intolerable nuisance. The dead (commonly four or five die every day) are left lying three or four days before being removed, which proves infectious to the others, who are 600 or 700 in number.

In Dunkirk they are also crowded 70 or 80 in one small room, where one half must stand up while the other lies down.

(b) In England. The agents have orders to provide fresh straw every fortnight and tubs and other necessaries for keeping the prisoners clean and removing nuisances. The sick are kept apart and are doubtless carried out of the prison immediately upon their death. In even the narrowest places of confinement they can all lie down, and, in most of them, have courtyards in which to exercise.

3. (a) In France. Some mariners who, at Dinant, were allowed, for money, to bury their dead, were insulted by the mob, which was allowed to throw stones and dirt at them. One of them was knocked down and another thrown into the grave.

(b) In England. No such complaints can be made. One officer who proposed corporal punishment for escaped prisoners was forbidden to do more than confine them more closely and ordered on no account to beat them.

4. (a) In France. The captain of the Ludlow in Dunkirk writes that so little care is taken of the sick that they will shortly lose more by sickness than by battle, which was eighty out of 300. They lie so near death before being removed to hospital that many die on the way there, "the hospital itself being worse than a hogsty, the rain falling in and standing there, which makes it as bad as a prison, and that in the said hospital they are not allowed any physic."

(b) In England. All the agents have orders to make the same provision for sick prisoners as for the sick and wounded Englishmen. They are removed into the hospital or town quarters, where the Queen pays 12d. a day each for their maintenance, besides physic. Our physicians and surgeons visit them daily, and their own surgeon is allowed to do so too. This is still allowed, though several of the said surgeons and sick have "been so disingenuous" as to run away from their hospitals when the pretence of extraordinary weakness had made the guards a little remiss in their duties.

5. (a) In France. The hospital at Dinant differs from the prison only in being a little more airy. The sick are sent back to prison as soon as they can walk, and generally die on their return, so that many, to escape that fate, petition to serve in their privateers, which has been done by twenty-eight or thirty at one time.

(b) In England. Far from being forced or encouraged to serve in the English fleet, many French prisoners have been refused leave to do so when they applied. Only in ten or twelve cases has such leave been given, where the applicants produced certificates from French Protestant ministers of their having been educated in the Protestant religion.

6. (a) In France. The masters of ships at Dinant are not allowed to relieve their men, being knocked down by soldiers for coming within call of them. They have been abused for giving them money when sent out for wood or water.

(b) In England. So far is this from being the case that when lately the French officers were removed from Southampton to Farnham, one of them was left behind under a particular guard, at the request of Count de Mornay, on purpose to distribute some money sent by him to the other prisoners there.

7. In France. Some English prisoners were lately drowned by the breaking of the bridge going into the Castle at Dinant. This may have been an accident, and no blame unless there was negligence in not trying to save them.

8. (a) In France. Richard Jones, a passenger on the Logwood Merchant, was taken and carried into the Canaries by the St. Joseph de Marseilles (Claudio Rebein, [?] master), and, whilst the said commander had a commission from the General of those islands, "barbarously whipped to death by order of the said commander."

(b) In England. No such inhumanity has ever been known.

1. To Mr. Ambler, at Spalding, Lincolnshire, J.P.

An officer of Lieutenant-General Stuart’s, who has lately been recruiting near you, says on oath that you rescued one, Jeremy Field, who had willingly enlisted at Dunnington, before John Burbidge, a constable there, whose certificate has been sent up, and who, it is said, declared the same to you. The Queen desires explanation of such conduct, which is contrary to your duty as a magistrate and against her service.

NOTTINGHAM to the Prince’s Council.

The Queen has considered the representations of the Old East India Company concerning the St. George (Captain Dampier), the Fame (Captain Pullerine) and some other ships which are, it is said, fitting out to cruise against the Spaniards in the West Indies.

Stop the ships till you have investigated the matter and reported your opinion on it.

Memorandum from Genoa.

I enclose a small draft of the entrance and port of Toulon, which is very intelligible. The new port, No. 1, has very bad water, and is only used for careening ships. As soon as careened they go into the bay, as the worms in the new port are very prejudicial. Details. It is very easy now, with very little force, to burn all their ships, especially the great ones which lie within the chain. They are close together, and there is no room to remove them out of danger. It is very easy going into the Bay No. 10, and few ships might do the work, their forces being inconsiderable. Details. If one ship were lit, all the rest would take fire, as they are so close together.

Two of the three ships building are being built for the Maltese. They work but slowly on them.

Memorandum on the French Squadron.

M. Coetlogon’s squadron consists of five ships. Names and crews given. These will soon be ready to sail. M. de la Harteloiere’s squadron is of four ships. Same details given. Coetlogon’s squadron will sail first. Four galleys will, it is said, sail from Toulon to Languedoc.

The fleet at Toulon, "which the Great Admiral of France is to command," will consist of at least 22 ships. Names and guns of eight ships given. Fourteen more preparing.

Taking these three squadrons together and adding thereto the two vessels from Port Louis, it is estimated that the fleet will consist of not less than 36 ships from 40 to 100 guns.

Mr. Scot, the bearer, is the person to whom the Queen has given the living of Sutterton in Lincolnshire. He has a large family, and a small vicarage has left him very poor. He deserves your charitable consideration.

The Queen continues to have complaints of the ill-treatment of English prisoners in France from different places. It is clear that her protests are unavailing in spite of all that has been done for the French prisoners here. I am to let you know this.

P. 4 of Signed. Endd. S.P. Dom., Channel Islands 2, 49.

16 Mar. Sick and Wounded Office.

The Commissioners of Sick and Wounded to the Same.

After attending at the Committee of Council yesterday we gathered the sense of the meeting to be expressed in your lordship's order to us:—For the present to reduce the subsistence of the French prisoners of war to 3d. a day, letting them know the reason, and that they may expect further hardship if the cruelty practised in France is not speedily redressed. We send copies of the orders which we have in consequence sent to our agents, and of a letter to Count de Mornay [see below for substance].

If these are not according to directions, please let us know.

A. The Commissioners of Sick and Wounded to Count de Mornay.

Her Majesty having lately received many grievous complaints of their sufferings [i.e., the English prisoners in France*], has given directions for a very mild measure of retaliation upon the French prisoners here. We have accordingly given to our agents the orders of which a copy is herewith. We might say more about the cruel treatment of prisoners in France. Refer to the leaving behind of an officer at Southampton for relief purposes. Proceed:—If an English officer even tries to relieve his men with money, he is beaten for it by the soldiers, and men are knocked down and insulted whilst burying their dead. Were this not sworn to by creditable witnesses we should not believe a Christian people could be guilty of such inhumanity. The denying of physic is an act of barbarous inhumanity, and these things are so highly resented by her Majesty that unless she speedily receives very good assurances of their being redressed, we shall have orders to treat the other French prisoners in the same way, and to arrest and confine you and all the other gentlemen with you and feed you on the same sort of diet as the English prisoners in France are compelled to take. You had therefore best make speedy representations to your Court.

P.S.—It is judged that your groundless reports of the ill-treatment of French prisoners here may have contributed to the cruelties practised in France.

B. The Commissioners of Sick and Wounded to Kympton Mabott, Marshal of the prisoners at Plymouth.

Recite the information received of cruel treatment of English prisoners in France [see above, pp. 624–626] and the kindness shewn to French prisoners in England [for which see same]. Direct the reduction of the subsistence money for each prisoner to 3d. a day. Proceed: — You may tell the prisoners why this is done, and also that though the Queen for the present, of her great goodness continues their allowance of straw and physic, yet, unless the cruelty used towards her subjects in France be speedily stopped, “her justice will call for such a retaliation as may (if the French King has any tenderness or regard for his own subjects) induce him to give effectual directions that those of her Majesty’s whom the chance of war shall bring into his power may be used like fair and honourable enemies.”

* The document, as noted below, is an extract.
The Commissioners of Sick and Wounded to Kynpton Mabbott.

As the design of this retrenchment is only to induce the French King to cease to treat English prisoners as he has been doing you are not only to read out this order publicly to them, but you are to permit any who wish it to write to France, their letters being first sent up to this Board to be perused. If you find any among them through whom you think this order might be sent to the French Court, you may give them copies of it as from yourself; and assure them that as soon as the Queen hears that the prisoners there have the benefit of the French King's pretended allowance of 5 sous a day, and are otherwise taken care of as those here have hitherto been, they will receive the same here.

JOHN SHERER, Mayor of Chichester, to [HEDGES]*.

Yours of March 8th. The prisoners say they came out of the prison at Southampton when their keeper was at dinner, finding the door open.

I believe they intended to seize a boat and get to France, they being all taken by the seaside. Two more have since been taken. A messenger from the Commissioners for Sick and Wounded has just come for them. I will hand them over, as ordered, and take his receipt.

Sends Lord Keeper's report on a grant depending at the Great Seal of the constableship of St. Briavel's Castle and wardenship of the Forest of Dean to Lord Berkeley. Directs him to prepare a warrant for a grant to the Earl of so much as her Majesty can grant of the former grant. Enclosing:

The report aforesaid.

In July last I received your Majesty's warrant under your

* Nottingham (not Hedges) wrote to Sherer on this matter on March 8; (see above at that date) but this letter begins, 'Sir.'
Privy Seal to make out letters patents under the Great Seal of England in words contained in the warrant, which purports to grant to the Earl of Berkeley the offices of constable of St. Briavels and Warden of the Forest of Dean during pleasure.

A caveat was shortly before entered by the Duke of Beaufort against the passing of the grant. I have since heard counsel on both sides and report:—

The castle and manor of St. Briavels are part of the Queen Dowager's jointure, and the Duke of Beaufort has a lease under the Queen Dowager and her trustees for a long term of years yet to come. During this period the castle and manor are the particular estate of the Duke, and his counsel insisted, and I take the law to be, that during the currency of his grant your Majesty cannot make a constable or keeper of the Castle other than the Duke himself, "every man by the law having the custody and ordering of his own house."

It is alleged by the Duke's counsel, and admitted by Lord Berkeley's, that the wardenship of the Forest of Dean has for some years been granted with the said office of constable of St. Briavels Castle for life to the person who has been farmer under the Crown of the said castle and manor.

King Charles II, by his letters patents dated 16 June, 1660, granted the said offices to the late Duke of Beaufort, then Lord Herbert, for his life. He enjoyed the same under that grant till 1697, when the grant became void by reason of the Duke's failing to sign the Association. At this avoidance the offices were granted by King William III, during pleasure, to the Earl of Berkeley, by whom they were enjoyed till the late King's death.

The Duke's counsel alleged before me that it will be a prejudice to the land which he holds under the Queen Dowager if he does not have the wardenship; but no proof of this was offered, and, even if it were, that would not alter your Majesty's right to grant the office of warden, which is, I conceive, in your Majesty's power to grant at your pleasure. It is "entirely in your Majesty's own Royal breast" how far you will consider the Duke's convenience. The grant therefore, as contained in the warrant under the Privy Seal, should not pass. But if your Majesty so desires, you may grant to the Earl of Berkeley the wardenship of the Forest of Dean only.

3. To the Lords Justices of Ireland.

Yours of the 6th received. Please send Baron Dalez to me as soon as may be.

Two ships have lately arrived at Dunkirk from Waterford laden with butter. Details. Masters' names, Anderson alias Elliott and Geraldine alias Fitzgerald. They pretended to be bound for Middleburgh in Zealand. Inquire for them on their return and have their sureties and freighters prosecuted with the utmost severity.

4. To M. Jurieux.

Pray write to your correspondents in all the ports of France to let you know what ships arrive there from time to time belonging to the English or their allies, their names, masters and cargoes.

5. To Mr. Methuen.

Yours of February 20 read to the Queen in the Cabinet. Command:—To tell you that it will be very difficult for the Queen and the States to perform their obligations under the Treaty to which you and M. Schonenberg have bound them. But the advantage of Portugal’s alliance with them is so great that the Queen will omit nothing that is any way possible for her to perform. It is hoped the States will co-operate heartily in this. It is strange that the Emperor’s minister should have objected to giving up Badajos, considering how much the Emperor will, or may, get by this alliance, whereas we get nothing but what is common to all Europe by reducing the power of France. Count Wratislaw will certainly be inexcusable if he refuses to refer the determination of this place to the Queen and States, as is proposed [by us]. The King of Portugal may also refuse to do this, but if he accepts Badajos or if he assents to the reference,* you must press the Ambassador to accept it also; or in the last resort press Count Wallenstein even to yield Badajos at once to Portugal. I have urged on Count Wratislaw the importance of obtaining Portugal’s alliance, and urged him to write to Count Wallenstein not to lose it for a trifle, especially when the conjuncture of affairs in Europe makes this alliance so necessary for the Emperor, not only in respect of Spain, but in regard to Germany itself, “where the Elector of Bavaria is a heavy burden upon him and the advances of the French are of great consequence, from which nothing can divert so effectually as a war upon Spain.” I think that Count Wratislaw will write in this sense, and that Count Wallenstein, though he cannot yet have orders from the Emperor, will be more likely to agree with us than formerly. Pray manage the affair with a just regard to the Emperor’s interest, and so as to end it by bringing the King of Portugal into the war.

I must now tell you that the Portuguese Envoy was with me this morning, and that from the questions he asked, it is plain that he thinks that the coming in of Portugal is already concluded (whether by the granting or the not asking for Badajos, I do not know). Then he asked me when the troops agreed on would go to Lisbon. I said I could not answer this question till it was known how many were to be sent and from where. I asked him—what he could as little answer—whether the King of Portugal would expect that all the troops agreed on should have actually arrived at Lisbon before he declared war. I pointed out that whatever we promised we should certainly perform, but that it would of course take longer to send all than to send a part, and that if his master's declaration were not made till all had arrived, an opportunity might be lost of doing with a few men what a larger number could not afterwards perform. He seemed to agree to this, but could not tell what his master would do. I send this information, as it may be of use to you; for he will probably report what passed between us.

* i.e. to the Queen of England and the States General.

6. To the Duke of Marlborough.

Refers to the subject of Badajos mentioned in his despatch of this date to Mr. Methuen [see foregoing]. It is reasonable to hope that Count Wallenstein either has had or will have orders to assent to the surrender of Badajos to the Portuguese. Proceeds :-The Emperor has resolved to show more deference to the Queen than hitherto. On the supposition, therefore, that such a Treaty is made, it may be well for your Grace to consider how we and the States may perform our part of it, which is 12,000 men, and, in particular how our moiety of 6,000 is to be made up, what we have here and in Ireland, and what may be had out of Scotland towards it; "and your Grace may remember what I suggested of troops from your army to be replaced by others from some German Princes." Repeats substance of his conversation with the Portuguese Envoy as to desirability of not delaying the Portuguese declaration till all the forces stipulated for have arrived in Lisbon. Proceeds :-The difficulty of getting 12,000 men together and of transporting them at once, if we had them, makes me offer the matter to your consideration.

The time prefixed for the Mediterranean squadron has elapsed, and we do not hear that the States will concur with us in this design, though we depend upon it. I therefore only mention, first, that Sir C. Shovell, who is to command it, and the Prince's Council, think it should consist of thirty-two capital ships, besides frigates &c. Of this the Dutch proportion is twelve ships, of which we have here but six, and our twenty are ready. Secondly, the departure of the ships should be hastened and ought not to be postponed on account of the Dutch merchants, who wish to go with the squadron. Such a delay lost our fleet last war in Lagos Bay and will frustrate the whole design.

Count Wratislaw asks me every day for the Queen's moiety of the 100,000l. for Italy. You know why it is delayed. I know it is not proper for us to solicit the States, but your opinion of the advantage thereof to the common interest would no doubt forward the success of Count de Goes' solicitations.

Colonel Codrington has received his orders, and some of the troops from Cadiz and Ireland reached him on 23 January. The others were daily expected from Barbados. He has raised a regiment of twelve companies and two additional companies, and does not doubt of success. I hope soon to send your Grace good news from those parts. "That we may hear nothing else but good from you is the hearty wish of your Grace's &c. Nottingham."

7. To the Prince’s Council.

I suppose that the ships designed for the Mediterranean expedition and all relating to them are so far advanced that if the Dutch ships agreed on to go with them should arrive there will be no delay in their starting. I think it necessary for you to tell the merchants when the ships to form part of the squadron will go from the Thames to Spithead, that the merchantmen may make use of them so far as a convoy; also to inform the officers of ordnance that they may put as many arms as practicable on those men of war and order any ship which they use to carry the rest to go with them.

8. To the Officers of the Ordnance.

The Queen desires 20 land carriages for great guns of 24lb. balls, four mortars with shells in proportion, and 4,000 muskets and powder and ball prepared and put on board some of the ships designed to serve under Sir Cloudesly Shovell. The Prince’s Council will give you notice where these are, some being in the river and some at Portsmouth. I am informed that the shells for the mortars cannot be stored in the men-of-war, so that there will be need for a transport ship. I will get you her Majesty’s warrant in form, but send you this notice to save time.

P.S.—More than a proportionable quantity of powder and ball may be needed. Details.

A PROCLAMATION OF INDEMNITY to be published in Scotland.

Recites desire for peace and justice, by exercise of the Royal clemency in reclaiming offenders. Proceeds to declare pardon to all the Queen’s subjects of all crimes of “perduellion, rebellion, treason, concealing of treason, harbouring, resell, supplying and corresponding and intercommunicing with rebels and declared enemies, the impugning the dignity and authority of the Estates of Parliament and all other kinds of treason or lese Majestie, whether common or statutory,” and all acts of slandering the Crown or of malversation committed before this date. Favourable clauses. All forfeitures, sentences, &c., already paid and transacted are excepted, and also all murders, witchcrafts &c. [List of ordinary crimes follows.] The heralds to make due proclamation of this pardon at the Market Cross, Edinburgh.

JAMES PINNELL, Mayor of Oxford, to NOTTINGHAM.

I have arrested the persons named in your lordship’s warrant, and have them in the common jail here under a good guard. Professions of loyalty.

The Marquis de la Gallisonnière to Nottingham.

I was arrested last night at my house and brought to prison. I was held by the arm as if I were a thief. It is a great indignity to an officer who has served with honour for forty years to be treated as a criminal. I have not a bed to lie on, and my servants have not been allowed to get for me what I want. Pray intercede for me with the Queen for treatment as a prisoner of war. My servants should be allowed to bring me food.

P.S.—I am still much inconvenienced with rheumatism.

Count de Mornay to the Same.

I received your lordship's when in prison, where we have been since 11 p.m. last night. I wish I had had it before, for we would have yielded without force or constraint to any orders which we know came from the Queen. We have already done so. Force was not necessary, nor should we have been disarmed in our houses or treated in the streets like criminals.

As to the cause of our arrest:—I cannot believe that the Queen's subjects are subjected to the greatest hardships. When, on the complaint of the Commissioners [of Sick and Wounded], I recently applied to M. le Comte de Pontchartrain, he immediately sent certificates signed by all the prisoners rebutting the charge of cruelty. I hope you may find that these present complaints also have no foundation, and have cause to regret the way in which we have been treated. I cannot agree that the French prisoners here are well treated. I have received and continue to receive many grievous complaints. Nothing could be worse than the condition of some of those wretches. But for the help which I was able (by order of M. de Pontchartrain) to send them, many more of them would have died. We make no complaint of our treatment at Oxford up to now, and have not abused the liberty given us. We have now, however, to complain of undeserved treatment, and can prove that the reports which the Queen has received have no foundation.

We have had to pay largely for the accommodation we have had here. Had the English officers in France done the same they would not have made the [alleged] complaints in different places, complaints wholly contrary to the purport of the last letter received by Count de Sorel, of which I sent a copy to the Commissioners of Sick and Wounded. At Dunkirk they are allowed all amusements, and dine daily at the Commandant's table. We here are treated like criminals.

Hedges to the Lord Treasurer.

I send Captn. Henry Thomas's petition and the late Lord Lieutenant of Ireland's report thereon. The Queen desires to do something for him. Further pleasure.

P. ½ (large). Followed by:—

Answer of Rigby, Shepard and Plowman* to a memorial presented to the Queen by the Great Duke’s Envoy on March 18, 1703.²

We acknowledge your Majesty’s clemency to us and due regard to the dignity of the Great Duke. We confine ourselves in this answer to matters of fact, and hope to justify ourselves by the Great Duke’s own narrative.

The charge against Plowman, based on an alleged promise not to molest the French, has been already made, and examined by Sir Charles Hedges. The Lords Justices decided, on his report, that the proceedings at Florence were against the law of nations and that the Great Duke was liable in damages, and that the laws would vindicate the King’s [King William III’s] demand for satisfaction. A copy of this decision was sent, by the King’s order, to the Great Duke.

The sentence of the Great Duke on Plowman alleged that the promise was given to the Duke himself. The memorial to the late King says that it was given to Signor Teresi. The present memorial† says that it was given to the Great Duke and the principal ministers of his Court. This shews that the first allegation could not be supported by evidence. Plowman did not, as implied in the last memorial, try to fly from justice. When he returned from the Levant he appeared openly at Messina and Naples, and, being confident of his innocence, left those places and returned towards Florence and Leghorn. On his way there he was ignominiously surprised at Rome.

It is not true, as alleged in the last memorial, that none of the Replicants’ goods were seized except those in the Great Duke’s territory. Other of their goods were seized [details] by the Duke’s ministers at Naples, and the materials deposited at Leghorn as a pledge for Plowman on condition of his liberation were in the most disparaging manner put up to public sale, whilst he remained in prison in breach of the agreement [to liberate him]. "These goods cost double the sum of what the Great Duke acknowledges their proceeds to be, and his sentence and countenance to the French encouraged them to seize and swallow up the Replicants’ effects in sundry other places, which cut the sinews of their credit and caused all their correspondents to abandon them."
In place of the articles of neutrality and the Great Duke's ordinances, "natural neutrality" is now put forward as a ground for objecting to the fitting out of English privateers at Leghorn. This is a thing unknown in international compacts, and which, as the Replicants submit, can have no determined sense to the prejudice of a neutral nation. "The French armed out from Leghorn," notwithstanding the cartel, and the Great Duke's ordinances and natural neutrality. The Replicants bought and fitted out at Leghorn their ship Charles, and obtained a commission from England for Captain Pickering, who took prizes and brought them into Leghorn. No complaint was made of this proceeding, though the Charles went in company with the Philip and Mary, John Brome commander.

In his last memorial are put forward for the Great Duke's vindication three arguments.

1. William Plowman's consent for the delivery of the effects to the French, the confession of his fault and his acknowledgment of the Great Duke's clemency.

3. That the late King, by his minister, declared his satisfaction with the manner in which the affair had been carried and ended.

The Replicants answer first, that since the Great Duke relies on these three points, they hope that, if they can be shewn to be bad, he will no longer deny or delay just reparation.

As to the first point. Any confession or admission made by William Plowman was made under duress and in fear, and for his self-preservation and after 32 months in a dungeon. It was but an extorted compliment to the Great Duke.

As to the second: Sir Lambert Blackwell, the minister for England, was in London when Plowman was arrested, and for some time after, and first heard of the transaction by a letter of Oct. 9, 1699, from the Duke's Secretary of State, M. Montomagni. Sir Lambert protested against the treatment of Plowman to the French Envoy and Consul, and asked them to keep the goods, money &c. taken from him till the third article of the Treaty Ryswick should have been explained by their Sovereigns [i.e. the Kings of England and France]. It cannot be said that an English Envoy knew of transactions if he were merely present at Florence when the acts complained of took place, since they took place secretly in a dungeon. Such an argument might be used to justify all sorts of oppressive measures. [Details.]

As to the third: King William III never expressed such satisfaction as alleged. When all the facts became known to him [details] he demanded reparation and damages by his Envoy of the Great Duke, according to a detailed account. This demand the Queen has approved and renewed.

The Replicants admit the Great Duke's candour in owning (1) the prizes taken by Captain Broom, who had a commission from England; (2) the surprising, seizure and detention of Plowman; (3) the arbitrary sentence pronounced against him in favour of France and the seizure of his goods and their surrender to France, and all this notwithstanding several letters written by the late King.

On these admissions the Replicants' case stands. They, therefore, pray for reparation and that the promises made to his late Majesty will be made good to the Queen. The Replicants did nothing contrary to the law of nations, but merely embarked on lawfully commissioned ships which, in accordance with the rules of war, were acting against a common enemy.

18 Mar. Information of George Dunn.

Lives in Shoe Lane, near Holborn.

Sworn, he says:—Was talking with Thomas Wadley (to be found in the Mint or the Rules) about his going abroad. Informant told Wadley he would be taken up by virtue of a late Act about prisoners on Tuesday last, the 16th of March, at Southwark. Wadley* answered him "in these words or to this effect, 'God damn the Judges and their warrants and the Parliament for making such an Act, and that brandy-nose bitch, the Queen, for signing it, but I suppose she will not stay to sign any more, for I believe she will run after her father into France before another Parliament comes.'"

A week ago informant heard William Wadley, brother to the said Thomas, speak words much to the same effect.

Captain Serville, who was sick in town quarters, has escaped on a Dutch privateer, where I believe seven of the seventeen who broke prison are with him; but we have searched and cannot find them. The soldiers implicated have been severely punished. I wish some course was taken to prevent the Dutch privateers from receiving such men. They think nothing of it, and if it is not stopped, I fear they will get many more away from us.

Enclosed: Memorial saying that the Santa Maria or St. Marie (Captain, F. Aviz de Mattes, and proprietor, Pedro de Miranda), had been seized by the Medway on a journey from Portugal to Holland, and carried into Plymouth.

2. To the Commissioners of Trade &c.

The Turkey Company have required an oath of all their factors in Turkey against selling upon trust (copy enclosed), and have enforced it with an order of 24 Oct., 1701 (details given) and another order of May 12, 1702, for suspending all persons that decline the oath from their liberty of trade, whereby they will incur a penalty of 20 per cent on all goods received or laden by them on any account. Some of the members of the Company are against the imposition of this oath, and selling on trust is practised by all the “Frank” merchants in Turkey. This oath not only hinders that but prohibits the factors from trusting for their own goods and even those of the growth of Turkey. It is a question if they have power to impose this oath; but the Queen desires you to consider how far it is advantageous to English trade, and report.

Same. RICHARD WARRE* to JOSIAH BURCHETT.

Pursuant to your order I have perused the memorial of the Portuguese Envoy relating to the Santa Maria of Lisbon, seized by the Medway (Captain Littleton). I have also perused the depositions of the ship’s company, and find there are so many suspicions that the property of the ship and lading ought to be made out in a judicial way.

Some of the company say that:—

The alleged owner, Peter Marianta, is a poor shop-keeper in Lisbon, who sells cheese &c. in a small way, and was never, so far as deponents know, the owner of any ship.

The pretended pilot is really the master and is a Frenchman, the Portuguese master being only "for colour." The real owners are two Frenchmen, Michael Levegue and James Legrete, natives of Rochelle, and merchants in Lisbon. Garsein, Antonio Samara and Brukus, three other owners, are Flanderkins, who appointed Lassale to be the true master. He has sailed in several ships from Lisbon for eight or ten years on their account as owners.

The ship is of about 250 tons; and the owners, in order to get the present Portuguese pass, gave Marianta 8,000 crusadoes to buy her and get the pass. Marianta afterwards returned the 8,000 crusadoes to the Frenchmen; all of which one of the now ship's company swears that he saw.

These facts appear from several examinations taken at Plymouth.

The COMMISSIONERS for SICK and WOUNDED to NOTTINGHAM.

The cartel for general release of English and French prisoners may take some time to arrange, and applications have been made to us by several French prisoners that, in the meantime, they may be exchanged for English prisoners in France of the like quality. M. We have sent over the named Frenchmen with Captain Gibson in the Dover transport, and desire the return of the Englishmen. Pigault’s letters makes us believe that our word will be taken to release any French prisoners desired in exchange for the English mentioned in the second annexed list*, if the latter are returned by Captain Gibson. We will release them provided that any inequalities which may be found in comparing them be adjusted afterwards by releasing such other or more important prisoners as we may demand. We request the Chief Officer of Marine to deliver to Captain Gibson a receipt for those sent over and a list of the prisoners sent back in exchange to England, with names and the date of their capture, in the annexed* form. Captain Gibson has orders to give any receipts, accounts &c. which are desired of him. If the said Chief Officer has any proposals to send us regarding the keeping accounts of exchange of prisoners pending the cartel, we will answer them.

Your remedy is in your hands, and you will receive the treatment due to your rank when the English prisoners in France are properly treated. The Queen will at once give orders for this to be done.

Memorandum from Arras [?], 21 Mar., 1703.

Last Saturday I was sent here with the other officers of Dunkirk. We arrived to-day after a most troublesome journey of seventy miles, over the worst roads you can imagine. I am now shut up in a citadel and barracks. It is the place where they put soldiers, and as miserable as such places usually are. Nobody who can speak English is allowed to speak to us. It is the criminal prison into which prisoners of war have never before been put. My only fault is that I complained of the Commissary of Marine to the Governor of Dunkirk, and of our treatment. It still goes on.

The Marquis de la Gallissonnière to [NOTTINGHAM].

I am sending to M. de Pontchartrain the note of complaints of the treatment of English prisoners in France which your lordship has sent me. If there has been such ill-treatment it can be due only to the negligence of some inferior officer. Such negligence occurs in England as well as in France, and we have had much evidence of it sent to us.

Yours of 19th. The four mortars should be two of 13 and two of 10 inches. To each of them the shells and carcasses should be in the same proportion as the Duke of Ormond had. With them must be sent the proper number of bombardiers. To the 4,000 muskets [must be added] 100 rounds of powder and ball, and there must be also added bayonets, cartouches and as many swords and belts; also 20 rounds of powder and ball for 20 great guns of 24[lb.] ball.

The carriages, muskets, swords and mortars may be stored in the men-of-war, but the ammunition, shells and carcasses cannot be carried in them, and must go in a special store-ship. An officer should be sent to take care of them.

23 Mar. Hereford. FRANCES ELLTON [née [?] DURNFORD] to the QUEEN.

Your many favours, and our old friendship, induce me to make a request in favour of a friend whose life, without your intervention, will be wrongfully taken away. Thomas Pritchard of Hereford, glover, aged about sixty, was for twenty years in the service of the Crown, and is now a pensioner at Chelsea. He was for 30 years a reputable householder, "keeping his trade going by means of his wife in his absence, in St. James' Street near Pickadilly." Being sick he came to Hereford for his health last autumn. A robbery having been committed on 9th October last, he was seized for it by some malicious persons; but when those who had been robbed viewed him, they "denied him and his horse." Yet some time afterwards they retook him and swore against him. I send an abstract of evidence given for and against him at the trial to inform you and assist your charity. All the witnesses for him are of high character, &c.; and I, as one, am deeply concerned for him. Several of the jury already repent their rash verdict against him. He is under sentence of death and to be executed in Easter week. I beg you will receive this request favourably.

1703.

I am in a dreadful cell with the conduit of a privy in it. M. Begon, my brother-in-law, and my servants are separated from me. I regret the complaints of the officer, which you sent, but there is a great difference between being lodged in a barrack [as he is] than in a cell. I pray for an order for better treatment, and, as I know, have served for long.

I have written to M. Pontchartrain and enclosed yours to me at Oxford and the complaint you sent. Pray let me know if you wish me to write again. Pray ask for favour from the Queen for me and the other gentlemen*.

2. To the Prince’s Council.

The Queen has heard that the Genoese cover the trade of the French and Spaniards and shelter their goods on board Genoese ships under feigned bills. Her Majesty would have you give orders to the commanders of her ships to search Genoese ships and, whenever they find just cause of suspicion, to bring the ship in to be examined and proceeded against according to justice.

Directing that the six marine regiments designed only for service at sea be henceforth under the sole control of the Lord High Admiral. As Colonel H. Mordaunt’s regiment, which is now in Jersey and Guernsey, is one of the six, it shall cease to be reckoned as one of them, and the regiment commanded by Brigadier William Seymour shall be substituted for it as one of the six. Mordaunt’s regiment shall be reckoned as a land regiment for the future. Consequential changes to be made in the establishments of the land and sea forces. Details.

I have always, since a prisoner of war, obeyed your lordship’s directions; and if I have not done so exactly in recent days, it is only because they were sent me by simple written orders without explanations as to what you really desired. If you wish me still to write, pray send some one whom I can understand to tell me what your wishes are. I shall report them to M. de Pontchartrain with the same accuracy as before.

I have had fresh letters of complaint from the French prisoners in England, and will shew them to anyone whom you send. I supposed that you gave me leave to write to M. de Pontchartrain with the intention that I should let you have his answers.

The object of my letters has been, and will be, to improve relations.

I told them so, and they drew a bill on me for 300l., which I accepted and paid, expecting to be reimbursed from the said share; but this, though I have several times applied to the Commissioners, I cannot obtain. INFORMATIONS AGAINST JOHN WHITE, a Popish priest.
1. Mary Newbury, wife of Mark Newbury of Wandsworth, says on oath:—

One Mrs. Forster, living near the Vine tavern in Holborn, makes it her business to draw the Queen’s subjects from Protestantism to the Popish religion. She and White have lately used many arguments to bring over deponent, and persuaded her to go to mass, perform many of the ceremonies of the Church of Rome and leave the Church of England. White directed Forster to give deponent a Popish catechism, and Forster directed her to drink this health: “Confusion to the old overthrown Olive and prosperity and honour to the young Cedar”—which, Forster owned, meant the Queen and the pretended Prince of Wales.

* Unaddressed; but see Hedges to the Dutch Envoy above at p. 279.

Forster's maid, named Cicely, to-day assaulted deponent in Lincoln's Inn Fields.

P. ½. Copy, with copy of deponent's mark and note that it was taken and sworn before Ger[ald] Ireton.

2. The aforesaid Mary Newbury says further on oath:—

She went to the Portugal ambassador's chapel about a fortnight since and there saw White officiate as a priest and administer the sacrament. Afterwards the priest told her to go to Mrs. Forster's house in Holborn to be further instructed for changing her religion. He followed her there, persuaded her to change her religion, and directed Forster to give her a catechism for her further instruction, and ordered the deponent to come on the following Sunday to Forster's house to hear mass.

The Earl of Burlington to [Same].

M. de Pimont, who is now a prisoner of war, is an old friend, and I therefore trouble you on his behalf. He thinks that he is being kept close prisoner not by the Queen’s or your order, but by a jailer who wants to get money from him. Eight prisoners are kept in a little room with two windows. They have nothing to lie upon that can be called beds, which they cannot get for money, nor any food or drink they can take. Their servants are taken from them and others, whom they cannot understand, given to them. I went to the prison to see him, but the jailer would not let me see him, but said that several people had seen him that day, and that he had orders to let no more do so. He said it was a verbal order. I thought it strange that a peer and Privy Councillor could not see a prisoner as well as his gaoler. He would not permit the prisoner to come to the window and talk to me in my coach. If such treatment is authorised by you, pray let me have a line to say so.

About M. de Pimont to [the Earl of Burlington ?].

Thanks him for his kindness. Has just heard of his father’s death, and will be ruined unless he goes to France. Begs for a present of [Burlington’s] portrait, which will be as dear to him as “that of a mistress.”

Instruction for the Duke of Ormond as Lord Lieutenant of Ireland.

We have appointed you Lord Lieutenant and give you full authority to keep the peace, the laws and the commendable customs of Ireland and to govern all our people there, chastise and correct offenders, and countenance such as shall do well. For your guidance we prescribe as follows:—*

1. Similar to Clause 2 of Robartes' instructions.

2. That "Forasmuch as the principal foundation of good success in all our actions doth rest upon the service of God, we do especially require it from you that above all things you endeavour to settle matters so in the church that Almighty God may be well served, in order whereunto you are to take care that the spiritual livings in our gift, as they shall become void, be supplied with pious and orthodox persons, and who, being of good repute, may reside upon their benefices; and you are also to persuade other patrons of livings to do the like and to avoid all manner of corruption in bestowing the same."

3. Similar to Clause 3 of Robartes' instructions.

4. As we have appointed Commissioners to manage the whole of our revenue in Ireland, we direct you to countenance them and their officers and take care that our Judges, and especially the Barons of the Exchequer, do the same. Call on the Commissioners frequently for reports on their proceedings and transmit an account of these to us.

5. Repeats Clause 11 of the 1st Marquis of Ormond's instructions.

6. Letters received from us for disposing of money to public uses shall take precedence of any letters which we may send at the same time granting sums to private persons.

7. If it should happen at any time that our revenue is insufficient to meet our charge, you shall pay no pensions till the civil and military lists have been paid. If, after that, there is not sufficient money to pay all pensions, they must all be reduced in proportion.

8. Give no orders on any letters which shall come from us granting any money or lands or releasing or abating any quit rent or sum due to us until a petition for it has been presented here and sent to you for report, or presented to you and recommended by you to us. In the former case, after your report

* See the instructions to the 1st Marquis (afterwards 1st Duke) of Ormond as Lord Lieutenant of Ireland in Cal. of S.P. Ireland, 1666-1662, at pp. 555-58; the drafts for instructions, and instructions to Lord Robartes in Ibid, 1666-69, pp. 740-746 and 759-61; and the instructions to Lord Berkeley of Stratton, Ibid, 1669-70, pp. 78-81. These instructions are calendared with reference to the instructions set out in those volumes. A critical comparison of the various instructions is very interesting, but would be out of place here.
(if it is favourable), the petition shall go to the Lord High Treasurer of England or Commissioners for his office, who shall be informed of your views on it. A report from the Treasury is to be made upon it before any letter is signed.

9. Repeats clause 4 of Robartes' instructions (concerning exact musters). Form of oath for all officers, soldiers and governors of towns and castles follows. It is "to be true to our Sovereign Lady Queen Anne and to serve her honestly and faithfully in the defence of her person, crown and dignity against all her enemies and opposers whatsoever," and to obey her and her superior officers' orders.

10. Repeats clause 6 of Robartes' instructions (army quarters), but omits the restriction of officers' leave to three months. Adds: If any officer misbehaves you may either try him by a proper Court or else suspend him till you have represented the matter to us and received our pleasure on it.

11. "Being informed that there have been frequent duels and quarrels between the officers of our army there, we . . . authorise . . . you to cashier from time to time all such officers as shall send, receive or deliver any challenge, or give any real affront to any other, the same being made appear to you." Any person so cashiered shall not be re-employed in our service.

12. Repeats clause 15 of Berkeley's instructions (concerning forts and saltpetre).

13, 14, 15 and 16. Repeats in substance clause 12 of Robartes' instructions (trade, "Protestant strangers," export of wool and vending of small coins). Clause 13 adds:—"And we particularly recommend to you the improvement and encouragement of the linen manufacture there."

17. To help you in your office we declare that we will entertain no complaint of injustice or oppression against anyone in Ireland unless it appear that the complainant has first made his address to you. The places in the Chief Governor's gift are left to your patronage, and we will grant them to no one upon application made to us here.

No new offices shall be erected in Ireland without your knowledge. All orders for payment of money shall be directed to you; and no patent granting land, money or abatement of rent shall pass here without your knowledge. We have had this rule entered in the offices concerned here.

18. We leave it wholly to you to give licence of absence out of Ireland to any Bishop, Privy Councillor, Officer or Judge.

19. When any vacancy occurs in any ecclesiastical or civil temporal office which we have by your commission reserved to our disposal, you shall let us know of the vacancy and recommend a person for it. We will not grant such office until we have had your recommendation, and if we decide to appoint any person other than him whom you recommend, we will not do so till we have had your opinion on the appointment we propose to make.

20. You shall from time to time make particular report to us as to such of our servants there as do well, to the end we may favour them; to which end you are not to grant the reversion of any office, and to take care that all vacant offices be granted only during our pleasure. In future no civil or military appointment shall be sold, under penalty of its vacation by the buyer. Only the allowed and proper fees shall be taken by civil officers. Penalty—discharge and prosecution.

21. Give no orders on any letters signed by us for grant of any land, pension or title there unless it has been entered in our Signet Office here, whereby the scandal of granting the same thing to several people may be avoided.

22. It having been represented to us that several rebels and fugitives pass over from Scotland into Ireland and shelter there, we direct you to establish a correspondence with the Council of Scotland and to establish a packet-boat for that purpose, if you find it necessary, and to give order for arresting such fugitives as you shall have the names of from time to time from Scotland, and sending them back there to be tried.

23. All matters coming from you and touching our revenues shall be sent to the Lord Treasurer or Commissioners of the Treasury, and all others to Lord Secretary Nottingham.

24. Repeats clause 15 of Robartes’ instructions [re conflicting orders].

25. Inform yourself what has been done in execution of the recent proclamations requiring the Papists to bring in their arms; and see they are executed, so that no Papist be allowed to carry arms unless allowed to do so under a capitulation of some town. Endeavour to check abuse of those capitulations and restrain the keeping of arms as far as possible.

26. Settle the militia in all counties according to the present rules, so far as is legal and practicable.

27. Do not reverse outlawries; but, on a good case for reversal being made to you, report to us on it.

28. See that the articles given to Limerick and Galway are strictly carried out without granting any further privileges thereunder than we are in honour bound to do.

29. Call no Parliament under your general powers unless you have our particular orders to that effect.

The Commissioners of Sick and Wounded to Nottingham.

Send enclosed.

Three lines. Signed by five Commissioners. S.P. Dom., Naval 118, 89. Enclosing:—

A. Count de Mornay to the Commissioners of Sick and Wounded.

I am ready to write to France for my particular exchange if it is desired. I should have passed for a silly person (un étourdi) if after having asked for power to treat for a general cartel I had solicited my private release before my request was answered from France. Perhaps the orders issued in France to treat the English prisoners well have not been carried out.
I have written to have this done, and will write again if you so desire. If you send me the complaints you have received, I undertake to have them remedied in 15 days, or else certificates produced to show they are false. Pray send some one with whom I can talk at length.

I made complaints to you and Lord Secretary Nottingham only on many written informations which I received and in the execution of orders which I received from France. Pray send an answer.

27 Mar. Dublin Castle. The Lords Justices of Ireland to Nottingham.

Baron Dalez, to whom the French Protestants in the Cevennes wrote the letter of which we lately sent a copy, is the bearer of this letter. We have sent him over and paid his journey, and hope he may arrive in time for any commands which the Queen or your lordship may think fit to give him.

I had no time the other day to ask you to forward my letter to M. de Pontchartrain complaining of my pitiable state and of that of the other officers here.

I have seen a copy of an order of the Commissioners [for Sick and Wounded and Prisoners], in which they say we are to be given only "3 sols'" allowance, because the English prisoners in France are badly treated. Had I known of this charge, I could have written to France, where they would have ordered that this abuse should cease, or else sent certificates to prove that there was no such ill-treatment. Letters of M. de Pontchartrain, which I have seen, shew that the King of France desires that the English prisoners should be well treated in all ways.

We are very badly treated here, and can only save our lives by paying for relief at a price which will ruin us. We should willingly pay for our keep if some rules as to what we should pay were made and observed, and beg you to send a Commissioner to see that this is done. We cannot go out of the terrible places where we are to breathe the air without paying the jailer. It is a shame that officers of distinction should not have their valets to serve them and should be treated as criminals. A distinction has always been drawn between prisoners of war and other prisoners. Pray send to inspect our condition and let me know what you ask that M. de Pontchartrain should do in order that the prisoners on both sides may be promptly relieved. I desire leave to write home, and paper and ink for the purpose.

I send a letter received from the Commissioners of Transports and copies of orders given by me to the masters of the transport ships which were with me on the late expedition. If they have contravened these, I presume the Lord Treasurer will know about it through his Officers of the Customs; and will, I hope, give what orders he thinks necessary. The enclosures are sent to be laid before him.

29 Mar. Mr. Justice Gould to [Nottingham].

I received yours to-day at Wells and, as her Majesty requires, send an account of Thomas Husbands' trial. There was good evidence against him and one Pritchard, who were indicted by two indictments for stealing a bridle from one and some money from another. There was wounding. One witness for the Crown had ridden with them, and suspecting them to be highwaymen, had taken note of them and their horses. Seven witnesses came to support an alibi for the defence, swearing that the prisoner was with them at an alehouse in Hereford at the time on 9 October last when the robbery was committed about four miles away. Details. He was found guilty.

The Mayor of Hereford has since then written to me saying he thinks the man is not guilty and that this is the opinion in Hereford, wherein he differs from what he thought at the Bench. Three or four of the jurymen also came to me and expressed dissatisfaction with the verdict which they had given. I therefore granted a reprieve pending further advice. I saw a certificate of the Justices of the Peace of Middlesex and the curate, churchwardens and overseers of the poor and many other parishioners of St. Giles' in the Fields in favour of Husbands, who was also indicted before me twice, for the same offence, on the same day, but as no evidence was offered against him he was acquitted.

30 Mar. St. James'.

The Queen to the Parliament of Scotland.

We thought to have brought you together sooner, but have been so occupied with great affairs this winter that we could not do so. We have often assured our subjects of our intention to protect them in their religion, rights and liberties as established by law, and if there be anything else necessary for the peace and good of Scotland, we shall always be ready to have it "timeously" provided for.

You see how we are engaged in "a great and necessary war for the defence of the Protestant religion and the preservation of the liberties of Christendom," and hope you will be ready to guard against all dangers that may threaten from it. We would in particular have you consider the state of our forces, forts and garrisons, that they may be duly maintained, and make due provision therefor, and for the safety of the country. We commend to you the making and amending of laws for the improvement of trade. We are anxious for the promotion of religion, virtue and true piety, suppressing vice and immorality, and providing for the poor.

We have appointed the Duke of Queensberry our Commissioner for your meeting, and feel sure you will approve of him.

"This being your first meeting, and we having recommended nothing but what is for your own security and welfare, we confidently expect a suitable return and a dutiful and cheerful concurrence in what we propose; and that, all differences and animosities laid aside, you will with concord and diligence bring matters to such a happy conclusion as shall establish a lasting union betwixt us and our people."

The Prince's Council to Nottingham.

We have received your enclosure from the Commissioners of Trade and Plantations, in which they ask that the crews of her Majesty's ships bound to Newfoundland may assist in the work on shore there and that a boom be sent out for the protection of the harbour of St. John's. It is absolutely necessary that the ships of war should cruize off the coast for the protection of the fishery and themselves, until the trade shall be ready to come away, so their men can't be spared from them. These ships cannot carry over masts to make the boom, so the officers there should be told to cut masts there in the winter for the purpose, and to send them down on the snow.

Hedges’ Letters.

1. To M. Rosencrants [the Danish Envoy].

I send a project for renewing the treaties between England and Denmark, which will be carried out as soon as you please. Three lines, in French. S.P. Dom., Entry Book 101, p. 293.

2. To the Mayor and Burgesses of Liverpool.

I had laid your petition re the soil of Liverpool Castle before the Queen before your letter came. It has been referred to the Chancellor of the Duchy for report. Further pleasure. I shall help you, then as before, as far as I can.

P. ¼. Ibid, pp. 293, 294.

3. To the Lord Treasurer.

My letter to Mr. Stepney and Lord Nottingham’s to Mr. Methuen relating to the treaty with Portugal, were read and approved at the Cabinet to-day, and declared agreeable to what was resolved on Sunday; which I need not repeat. We are both sending copies to the Duke of Marlborough, that he may know how things stand, and he is to speak to the Pensioner so that the States’ ministers at Vienna and Portugal may have instructions on that subject similar to those given to her Majesty’s envoys. The Emperor has sent a letter to the Queen [partly set out], in which he commits to her care the managing of the whole matter of bringing in the King of Portugal, so that there is now greater hope for the success of that project than formerly. You will probably see Count Wratislaw, who is going to Newmarket to-morrow, and see if he has anything further to offer. This should be done before the Queen gives him an audience.

NOTTINGHAM’S LETTERS.

1. To the Earl of Burlington.

As English-speaking people are not allowed to see the English prisoners in France, the Queen has ordered that nobody who can speak French may go to see the French prisoners now in the Gate House. Had I known of your desire to do so, you would have been told earlier.

2. To the Commissioners of Sick and Wounded.

Queen’s command:—Send an account of what county prisons will be most fitting to receive the French prisoners in, and how many may be put in each.

The Queen approves your proposal to send a ship from Plymouth to St. Malo’s with French prisoners, which may bring back an equal number. Send them. Your proposal is based on a letter purporting to come from the Sieur de Saint Sulpice, Intendant of St. Malo, and several of the French gentlemen here say he is to be relied on, and that they know the letter is in his hand. Accordingly you must send it back with the ship. The Queen desires you to get a certificate under the Marquis de la Gallissonnière’s hand that the vessel is going with prisoners and going to bring others back, for her safety on her voyage and return. This declaration you are to deliver to the master.

The Queen desires some of you to go to the Gate House and report generally on the accommodation of the French gentlemen there and on the alleged exactions of the gaoler. Also you are to write to the Sieur de Saint Sulpice telling him what prisoners you are going to send over, proportioning the same to the English whom you may expect. You must send me a list of the English officers now in France and of the French officers whom you propose to exchange for them. Particularly see that Mr. Wanlesse, the officer in chief who commanded the recruits going to the West Indies, be exchanged.

3. To Mr. Methuen.

Yours of 9 March, o.s. I hear the treaty is practically concluded; but the Portuguese Envoy added that he had been told to tell me that his master would not declare war until the Archduke came to Portugal. He said the same thing some time ago, but promised to write and try to dissuade the King of Portugal from this step after he had heard me on it. My arguments were that the Archduke could not be in Portugal before the autumn, because of the preparations he must make to go there, but chiefly because the Emperor would not venture him there

Wt. 3880.
in the hot months; that the delay would enable Spain to arm and greatly increase the difficulty of reducing her to [obedience to] the Archduke; that if the Emperor and the Allies, immediately upon the declaration of war by Portugal, declared the Archduke King of Spain, the King of Portugal would have the strongest possible security that the Emperor would never recede from that step. Such a recession I found, from the Envoy's discourse, to be the thing which the King of Portugal most feared—and not without reason, as it appears that the Emperor is "more concerned for Italy than Spain." I was therefore surprised to find that the King should still insist on it.

Art. 19 of the project to which you desired the King's assent does not stipulate for it, merely saying that the Archduke shall come to Portugal and be received, and specifying no time; whereas Art. 23 provides that it shall take effect on the exchange of ratifications. Your recent letters [details] spoke of some points which were still insisted on, but not of this.
As, however, the King of Portugal's attitude may be really what his Envoy here describes, and as the presence of the Archduke would no doubt greatly contribute to success in Spain, her Majesty has told Secretary Hedges to instruct Mr. Stepney to urge the Emperor to declare him King of Spain at the moment when Portugal declares war, and to say that her Majesty and the Dutch will do so too, and probably the Allies will follow. He is also to press the Emperor to state publicly that he will send the Archduke to Spain in the autumn and to do so in fact.

"'Tis to be feared this pressure will be misinterpreted by the Emperor, as if the Queen and States had still in view the Partition Treaty, and, could Spain be regained to the House of Austria and consequently that trade to England and Holland, they would not be concerned whatever become of Italy, and though this be a very unreasonable jealousy, and must proceed from their not understanding our interests, and tho' this pressure of the Emperor to send the Archduke . . . . may minister to this jealousy, yet because, as I said, his presence is very useful and lest Portugal should finally insist on it," Mr. Stepney has been instructed as I have told you.

It is still, however, possible that the Emperor will not consent to send the Archduke at once or to fix a time for sending him, either because of his affection for him or because he will not venture him there till we have taken some port in Spain, to which he may retire if he is pressed. For this reason you are to urge the King of Portugal to act promptly and not to defer his declaration till the Archduke arrives, but to acquiesce in the Emperor's and Allies' treating him as King of Spain and the general promise to send him to Spain. Urge on the King the great advantage which he will gain by this treaty. Considering the difficulty which Count Wallesteyn made in agreeing to it and the concession of Badajos, surely the King should not, by sticking to his point about the Archduke's arrival, give the Imperial Court this chance of receding from it, which it is easier for that Court to take than any other; especially since he may now be sure of all the clauses concerning the Emperor; for the Queen has to-day received a letter from the Emperor placing his interests in the matter of the treaty unreservedly in her hands. Portugal should not hazard her prospects by insisting too rigorously on the Archduke’s coming before the declaration of war.

4. To the Lords Justices of Ireland.

The Queen has appointed the Duke of Ormond Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, and would have you communicate constantly with him during his stay in England and let him know all that passes.

NOTTINGHAM’S LETTERS.

1. To Mr. Ireton.

Queen’s command:—To discharge the bail (if any was taken) of White, the priest. He was born in Spain, and entered in the Secretary’s office as appertaining to the Envoy of Portugal; and does not appear to have officiated elsewhere than in the Envoy’s chapel.

2. To the Prince’s Council.

Queen’s command:—To pay [a sum equal to] 632 pieces of eight and four ryalls plate old money, to Sir Thomas Frankland. Mr. William Frankland has spent this sum in clothing and providing sixty-one English prisoners at Bayonne, and asks that the sum be paid to Sir Thomas.

31 Mar.

MR. JUSTICE GOULD to [HEDGES].

I have the Queen’s command to report on the trial of the convict Thomas Pritchard, who was indicted for robbery with Husbands.* The evidence against them was the same, and was directly opposed by evidence for the defence; but the jury convicted. I left him for execution, but at Monmouth I received a letter from the Mayor of Hereford, of which I send a copy, and a letter from the parson of the parish, certifying to the like purport. The same things were alleged for Pritchard as for Husbands, except the certificate of the Justices. He lived at Hereford, and was a cyder buyer. “I must confess there was desperate swearing.”

Charles Carwodine, Mayor of Hereford, to Mr. Justice Gould.

Since your lordship left here I find a general opinion among the citizens that Pritchard and Husbands who &c. [see foregoing], were not guilty. I have known them both for many years, and also known most of the witnesses in the case, and I share the general opinion here. I ask for their reprieve, as I know you would not have the innocent suffer. I hope time will discover the true offenders.

S.P. Dom., Anne 2, 75a.

Hedges recommends Samuel Eyres as a transporter of French prisoners. Two hundred of these are now to go from the West of England to St. Malo.

March. Memorandum on sending the English Fleet to Naples.

There are great inconveniences and risks in sending either the whole fleet, or a detachment, as far as Naples. It will take five months at least to get there and back, and “if the fleet stays to do any service there, either by descent or otherwise, it will then be so late in the year that they will run great hazard in coming in with [sic] the Channel at their return and getting into their ports.”

The carrying the Grand Fleet to Naples will leave the French absolute masters of these seas. If a large detachment go, England will still be exposed to great danger by not having sufficient force left to oppose the French at sea, and the detachment will run a risk of being destroyed by the French Toulon fleet coming down to join the French Western fleet, and lying together at Cadiz to intercept the said detachment.

If a small detachment is sent it will be even more exposed, and will not be capable of doing any service there.

(1) The plus and undisposed lands in the several districts mentioned, their acreage and the yearly quit rent charged on them, and the arrears of such quit rents unpaid between Christmas, 1682, and Christmas, 1701, amounting to 6,435l. odd, which charge has by mistake been continued hitherto, as appears by the reasons given in the book by the Commissioners; and

(2) Arrears of Crown rent due from the several rectories that pay port-corn to the Chief Governor from Christmas, 1682, as they were returned by the collectors of the several districts therein, to Christmas, 1701, amounting in all to 1,422l. odd; which rectories were granted by letters patents from the Crown to the clergy at a rent to the Crown therein mentioned, and a certain amount of corn [details], which corn was not paid and, the collectors not being able to collect it, became insolvent; but care has been taken, by an agreement between the parties, to provide that no such arrears shall accumulate for the future and

(3) The arrears of quit rents due from forfeited lands which were granted to various persons by King William III, or previously due from such lands, which sums have been lost to the Crown by the effect of the Act of Parliament for reassuming the forfeited lands in Ireland, amounting in all to 4,877l. odd.

The Commissioners of our Revenue there further report to the Lord High Treasurer that they have laid this book before the Barons of the Exchequer there, who have no objection to its being discharged. Forthwith give orders to discharge the said sums, which amount in all to 12,735l. odd out of the accounts of the several collectors, as desired by the said Commissioners. To the end that the undisposed lands in Ireland (which have hitherto been erroneously accounted for as quit rents) may for the future be managed for our best advantage, give directions to the said Commissioners to set them under such restrictions as they think necessary, and with the approval of you as Lord Lieutenant &c. for any term not exceeding thirty-one years. Memorandum [by the Commissioners of the Irish Revenue?] entitled “Reasons humbly offered for the striking of the arrears grown due on this article out of charge.”

The quit rent is payable in England by the Act of 17 Car. I in England, and by the Acts of Settlement and Explanation in Ireland.

* In this table the odd roods and perches and the odd shillings and pence of arrears are for brevity omitted. Both are stated in detail in the original.
1703. [March.] In 1660 the Surveyor General of Ireland returned to the Barons of the Exchequer there a book of all the lands surveyed and forfeited in Ireland. On this the Barons issued books containing the particular lands in each county, with direction to named Commissioners to make returns shewing who the persons were who were in enjoyment of these lands. Returns being made thereof, the Auditor General assessed the yearly quit rent on all the said lands according to the said returns. They stood so charged until the said lands were granted by decrees or certificates, and letters patents by the Commissioners of Settlement pursuant to the Acts. The persons who got these grants or decrees became then liable for the quit rent.

A great deal of land was, however, not disposed of by these Commissioners; most of it very rough and not worth the quit rent assessed on it. These lands have hitherto remained charged with quit rent. The farmers of the Revenue were to have no profit from them, but were allowed to deduct from what they paid in the amount of the quit rent due from them.

From those lands, whose value fell much short of the quit rent charged on them, great arrears are due from 1682 to 1702. These can never be collected. If these were wiped out and directions given to the Commissioners of the Revenue to set the lands in question at the best price to be got, a rent equal to the amount of the quit rent could now be got from them. Such insolvency would be prevented for the future.

The Lord Lieutenant asked us* to draw out a state of the case for the opinion of the Attorney General. The case is as follows:—

The Surveyor General, pursuant to an order from the Exchequer, made a return of all the forfeited lands returned by the Down Survey in the various counties in Ireland, with the number of acres in each denomination to which the Auditor General placed the quit rents payable thereout.

Several of these lands were passed in letters patents or decreed to innocent persons; in which case the quit rent charged on them was stated in the patents and decrees, and then put out of charge. Several of these lands remain undisposed and these remain charged with the quit-rent. They are called either "undisposed lands" (entire denominations of land) or "plus lands," i.e. portions of denominations granted to no one, and still charged with quit rent.

The undisposed lands were mostly so coarse that the adventurers and soldiers preferred remaining unsatisfied to taking them under the quit rents to which they were liable. Thus the mountain of Pobble O'Keife in the barony of Dunhallow [Duhallow], co. Cork, is returned by the Down Survey at 5,981 acres, and the quit rent put on it is 90l. odd. These lands, "upon the cant," would not be set for more than 10l. The collector returns a deficit of 80l. odd, which, for the nineteen years since the Revenue has been out of farm and in management, amounts to 1,535l. odd. This is one of several cases.

* I do not know who "us" refers to; but I have conjectured, as shown in the heading to this memorandum, that the draftsmen are the Commissioners of the Revenue in Ireland.
Queries.

1. Can the said mountain be properly said to be charged with a quit rent, seeing that it has never been passed and the land is in the Queen's hands and the full value thereof received by her?

2. How can the 1,535l. odd be struck out of charge and a growing arrear prevented during the Queen's perception of the full profits?

Answers—

1. The rent received by the Queen is plainly no quit rent, for it is the full entire profit of the land, and the Queen is in possession. The lands in question should not be continued in the roll of quit rents, since it is no quit rent.

2. The best way to strike out is to enter some memorandum or other relation of the whole in the rolls of quit rents, and set out the facts, and that the rents have consequently been taken out of the quit rent roll and put down under another head of Revenue to which they more properly belong. There can be no objection to this course. Signed, Robert Rochfort.

1703. [March.]

Reasons humbly offered [by the Commissioners of Revenue in Ireland?] for striking off the arrears in this article.

By the Act of Resumption all the forfeited lands were vested in the trustees free of all quit rents that had "incurred" [accrued] before their investiture. They were so to remain after sale of them, so that the Queen is for ever barred from coming upon the lands themselves. The reason that the foregoing arrears were in arrear at the passing of the Act of Resumption was this:—

We can issue no charge to our collectors on the passing new patents unless the same be transmitted to us by the Auditor General. We often called upon him for the same, who did what he could to oblige the patentees to enter their patent[s] with him; but the patents, being many, were not all entered with him at the time, and therefore could not be collected. We advised with the "King's Councell" as to whether, since we could not go on the lands, we could recover these arrears from the patentee. They advised on June 15, 1700, that the English Act had made void all grants from the King; and that the grants being void the conditions in them were void and that, as the Act is drawn, the King was without remedy for recovery of the arrears.

1 Ap. Whitehall.

HEDGES to WILLIAM BLATHWAYT.

The Duke of Marlborough is much disappointed that cloth has not come for the foot. I am told the fault lies on the clothiers and transport officers. Please give notice to those concerned to come to Lord Secretary Nottingham's office in the Cockpit to-morrow at 11 a.m. to clear the matter up.

The COMMISSIONERS of SICK and WOUNDED to NOTTINGHAM.

According to your orders we have directed a vessel to be prepared to carry over 200 prisoners from Plymouth to St. Malo. The Marquis de la Gallissonnière will give a certificate in addition to that of M. de Saint Sulpice to secure the vessel during her voyage. Mr. Wanless is the only English officer we know of who is a prisoner at Dinant; and we shall make a special request for his return. We propose to send off the oldest and most sickly prisoners now, and that English prisoners of the like sort be sent home in exchange for them. After them we may, if you please, give preference to those who have been longest confined; and will tell our agent to make a list of the men whom he sends; and the master of the vessel shall have it and also a request to the Sieur de Saint Sulpice to desire the return of the like number and quality, or as many more as he pleases for the like to be returned hereafter by us.

We have visited the French gentlemen in the Gate House. They were indifferently lodged, and have since been removed to better quarters. As they complain that the jailer makes them pay exorbitant prices for their diet, &c., and asked leave to give details, we shall send them when received. The jailers, whether in London or the county towns, are no officers of ours; and we think it better, "beside"* these complaints, to keep the prisoners where they are [than to move them to the county jails], for the following reasons:

First, the prisoners being over 4,000, would require twenty jails, holding 200 each, or, in view of the size of the jails and of other prisoners, forty jails.

Secondly, The [county] jailers being no servants of ours, we could not get from them such accurate accounts of the names and qualities of the prisoners and of the way in which her Majesty’s allowance for them is spent as we now have from our Marshals.
They send these in books according to the enclosed forms.
Without such accounts it would not be possible to prevent the expenditure of much money "in her Majesty’s wrong."

Thirdly, To carry prisoners to the jails, to bring them back for exchange and to pay for their keep will be very expensive.

Fourthly, Very spacious and convenient prisons have been fitted up for them at Dover Castle, Southampton, Farnham, and Plymouth. At Southampton they have room for some hundreds more. At Farnham there is no complaint as to accommodation, and from Plymouth we are now taking 200 away, which will stop overcrowding. If the exchange of prisoners goes on, we shall soon have more accommodation than we need; and we have just been offered a house at Winchester for 20l. a year that will hold 500 men. We could get accommodation there for 1,000 more for less than it would cost to move the prisoners to the county jails and keep them there. We can give further reasons, and, if they are desired, request an interview.

Count de Mornay asks for leave to go to France to arrange a cartel. If the complaints which he sends are true we will have them remedied and the officer punished.

Hedges to Colonel Gibson.

I send M. Vryberge’s answer in the matter of a Dutch seaman, who wants to go home. The matter being as the Envoy represents it, let the seaman go.

Same.

Nottingham’s Letters.

1. To the Commissioners of Sick and Wounded.

In exchanging prisoners, pick out such Frenchmen as were taken on merchant ships, or fisher boats, and leave those [taken] on privateers to be last exchanged. Many of the privateersmen being St. Malo men, M. de Saint Sulpice will probably ask for them; but you probably have enough others belonging to that port to make up the number, though all you send should not be Malouins. Details.

2. To the Sheriff of Hereford.

Queen’s command:—Respite execution of sentence on Thomas Husbands and Thomas Pritchard till further order from her Majesty.

P. ½. Ibid, p. 250.

3. To the Duke of Marlborough.

If any credit is to be given to what Mr. Methuen and the Portuguese Envoy here say, the treaty with Portugal is concluded, and we must consider how to fulfil our obligations under it.

I believe we could easily raise one or two regiments of French refugees. This would save our own subjects, who will be wanted to fill our regiments, for which it is already difficult to get enough recruits. It will be possible to make some attempt on the coast of France with the men we must send to Portugal, and for this purpose the French refugees will be specially suitable. When there is no further service for them it will be easier to disband them than the English, and they will expect less.

I should like your views as soon as possible, that nothing may be left undone on my part.

I know well that compliance with what we have undertaken by the treaty with Portugal will depend on our success abroad. I have no doubt of the result where your Grace is in command, but I fear even that will not render possible such a detachment from your army as this treaty will require, unless matters in Germany are more prosperous than as yet seems likely. However, if I might suppose such a case as I wish, and that we could have troops embarked and ready to sail by Midsummer, we should have two months’ time to act with them against France.
before it will be necessary for them to be in Portugal, "where by reason of the heats they cannot take the field till the beginning of September." Your Grace is the best judge of these matters, of which I know nothing; "and besides I am biast by an opinion that we shall never have any decisive success nor be able to hold out a war against France but by making it a sea war and such a sea war as accompanies and supports attempts on land."

We have no news yet here of the Dutch ships, which should join the Mediterranean squadron. If they disappoint us it will cause much clamour here. I believe I shall be able to discover the way of Isaac Boben's correspondence, and to inform you. Pp. 1½. *S.P. Dom., Entry Book 209, pp. 26, 27.

Instructuons to Lord Commissioner Queensberry for holding the Scotch Parliament.

1. You may give our assent to any laws that shall be proposed for the protection of the Protestant reformed religion.
2. You may give our assent to an Act ratifying Presbyterian Church Government by Kirk Sessions, Presbyteries, Synods and General Assemblies.
3. You may pass an Act allowing the episcopal ministers to preach in meeting-houses in such terms as the Parliament shall propose, "they always qualifying themselves by taking the Oath of Allegiance and signing the assurance."
4. You are to endeavour to obtain an Act asserting and recognising our right and title to the Crown of Scotland.
5. You are to pass Acts necessary against the Popish priests, and for suppressing the growth of Popery.
6. You are to give our assent to such Acts as may be proposed "for punishing and restraining profaneness and immorality."
7. You are to endeavour to obtain competent supplies for maintaining the forces on the present establishment and providing and repairing garrisons, to take effect after the present cess laid on by the last Parliament expires, for so long as allowed by Parliament.
8. You may pass any Acts proposed to prevent the irregular marching and quartering of our forces and for payment of what shall be supplied to them.

The Prince's Council to Nottingham.

We have by the Queen's command considered the representation of the Old East India Company concerning Captain Dampier in the ship St. George, Captain Pullerine in the ship Fame, and some other vessels now fitting out to sea, in order, as it is said, to cruise on the Spaniards in the West Indies. We sent for the persons concerned, and told them that the Company were afraid that something might be done by them (the vessels) which might be prejudicial to the Company's affairs in India, and recommended them to give such security to Dr. Bramston, Surrogate to the Judge of the High Court of Admiralty, as might satisfy the Company. We send Dr. Bramston's report on their security for her Majesty's consideration and approval, pending which the ships are, by her Majesty's orders, stopped in the Downs.

A. Dr. Bramston's report as above. The securities given in are 3,000l. for each ship (gives names of the sureties). They amount to three times what is required by her Majesty's instructions for privateers

Also enclosing [?].

The Commissioners of Sick and Wounded to [same].

Yours of yesterday crossed ours. We still think we should send away the old and sick prisoners first. These, though taken in privateers, cannot be more serviceable than merchant seamen or fishermen,* and we suggest that we should adhere to our plan. When we get our English prisoners back in exchange (and we hope to get back many more than we send), we may refuse them their privateers-men if they demand many of them. We will give orders that Le Griel shall not be sent over.

We send enclosures from the Marquis de la Gallissonnière [details] and from the French prisoners in the Gate House as to their gaoler's exactions.

* Nottingham had directed that men taken in privateers should be sent back to France last; see above at 2 April, 1703.

Dr. Sherard is in the Queen's service, but is pressed to return to "the College." The Queen is anxious to keep him here and to send dispensing letters to you for excusing him from residence, but does not know what her dispensing powers are in this matter. She will be tender of your rights. Pray find a way to avoid his suffering by being in the Queen's service. If a letter is necessary, I will send one in the form you like best. Pray arrange that no act is done to Dr. Sherard's prejudice until you hear further from me.

Nottingham's Letters.

1. To the Commissioners of Sick and Wounded.

Mayor of Chichester writes that Nicholas Furnace, a French prisoner, has been taken at the seaside. He escaped from the Tower alehouse. Send your officers to take him, and keep him more severely. Have you any account from them of how this man and others escaped? If so, send it, that they may, if negligent, be punished.

2. To Same.

The Queen approves of the enclosed certificate and letter of the Marquis de la Gallissonnière, and would have you send them away. Notwithstanding previous directions, 5d. a day is still to be allowed to the prisoners of war.

Note.—Enclosed was a letter from Gallissonnière to M. de Pontchartrain and a certificate from the same as described in Nottingham's letters of 30 March to the Commissioners of Sick and Wounded.*

Order Mr. Wyndham Cole and Mr. Robert Cole, who are nephews to her Majesty's Consul at Algiers, to be received on board the same ships and carried to Algiers; and give passage thither to the two Turks who recently came here after escaping from slavery, and to Bohas Pinhas, a Tripoli Jew, who was sent by that Government to Holland, and has now come here to get a passage home.

We hope for relief in the matter of the complaints sent.

PP. 1½ (small). (Hol.) In French. Endd. in Warre's [?] hand. S.P. Dom., Naval 118, 96. Enclosing:—

A. Memorandum from the French officers who are prisoners of war in Westminster prison.

They ask that a person be sent to regulate the price of rooms let to them. They are charged 1l. 1s. a week for each room.

They ask liberty to go from their rooms to visit one another, and to walk in the court without having to pay 6 sols each.

They desire that their servants may be allowed to prepare their meals without having to pay a daily fee for leaving the separate prison in which they [the servants] are kept.

They complain of being kept in cells, on rotten beds without sheets or bedclothes. The naval officers have to sleep on plank beds. They ask for beds and palliasses.

They ask for leave to buy their provisions freely and not to be compelled to buy anything from the jailer, who charges high prices; and for leave to speak to those who give them money.

PP. 1¼. In French. Ibid, 118, 96A.

NOTTINGHAM to P. BROWN (gaoler at the Gate House).

You are to take no fees from the French prisoners for their lodging or otherwise. The Queen intends to pay you for it.

You are not to demand any money for letting them go into the court of the prison. You are to permit their servants to come to them and attend them, but those servants must not leave the prison. One such servant may go out every day to buy provisions, and you must send some one with him to prevent his carrying letters or going elsewhere than where he gets provisions.

You are to let such of them as now lie on boards have beds fitting for their condition.

You may permit them to visit one another under such conditions as are required for safety.

In all other points observe your former instructions.

LORD HATTON to NOTTINGHAM.

There are now more than 400 prisoners in Guernsey, more than the garrison, and they are likely to increase by captures by privateers. Over twenty local privateers, and several from England frequent the place, and victual there. These privateers and prisoners are likely to starve the island, and the islanders can carry on no trade for need of convoys. Frigate urgently needed. The Lieutenant-Governor wants a holiday. An earthquake was lately felt there, accompanied by a loud noise.

Nottingham's Letters.

1. To the Marquis de la Gallissonnière.

Sends the orders to the gaoler (see above at 5 April, 1703), which will show how the Queen is anxious for the French prisoners to be well treated. If any gentleman wants to see his banker, leave will be granted on application.

2. To Dr. Bramston.

To take assignment of certain security offered by the owners of the St. George and Fame [details]. When this is done, the Queen will direct the embargo to be taken off and those ships to go on their voyage.

3. To the Commissioners of Sick and Wounded.

The French seamen sent to the Gatehouse on Sunday may act as interpreters between the French prisoners and the keeper's servants, but there seems no reason why the prisoners and the seamen should be allowed to converse more than is necessary for that purpose.

Dr. Amiott may attend on the Marquis de la Gallissonnière as a physician; but you must send somebody with him to see that this visit of a physician is not made use of for any other purpose.

Acquaint the Marquis that we are quite ready to treat with him for a cartel, but that the commission or full power, to whomsoever it be sent, must be sufficient and clear.

4. To the Council of Trade and Plantations.

By Queen's command:—I send you an extract from the Prince's Council's answer to your proposals that the seamen should assist in the work on shore in Newfoundland. Pray consider and report on it. Further pleasure.

The extract aforesaid:—

In answer whereeto we have to say that it is absolutely necessary that the ships should cruize off the coast for the protection of the fishery and themselves, so that their men can't be spared. Proceeds as in the Prince's Council's letter of 30 March, 1703, above.

Sir Cloudesly Shovell to Nottingham.

I have ordered the presents &c. you mention to be received on board the Warspite (Captain Edm. Loades), now in Long Reach. She will be there till Friday or Saturday. If they cannot be got ready by then, I hope they may be sent to Portsmouth, where the fleet is directed to sail. Yesterday, we came out with the great ships from Blackstakes to the Buoy of the Nore; and I suppose they will sail in two or three days for the Downs.

MEMORIAL by the LORD HIGH ADMIRAL.

Sir George Rooke informs me that the Barfleur, Newark and Queen are unfit for service owing to not having sufficient men. I therefore propose to the Queen, as advantageous to her service, that these three ships be paid off and laid up at Chatham, and that their foremast men be put aboard the new frigates fitting out in the Thames, that these may be sooner fit for sea.

NOTTINGHAM’S LETTERS.

1. To the Prince’s Council.

Command:—To give orders for an agent of the Victuallers to go with Sir Cloudesly Shovell to take care of the provisions brought aboard or bought later, and to send money for the payment of short allowance money from time to time. Sir Cloudesly has asked for this.

2. To the Lieutenant-General and Officers of the Ordnance.

Such things as are designed to be sent to Newfoundland should be put on board some transport ship and ordered at once to Plymouth, to be ready to sail with the Centurion, which is ordered to go thence next month.

P. 4. Ibid, p. 28.

3. To the Commissioners of Prizes.

Queen’s command:—Appoint an officer to go with Sir Cloudesly Shovell’s squadron and look after any prizes which the ships may take. Direct him to obey Sir Cloudesly or the commander-in-chief for the time being, and give him instructions for the valuation and disposal of prizes in such manner as you think best for the service.

NOTTINGHAM to the PRINCE'S COUNCIL.

I send draft order to Vice-Admiral Leake, which her Majesty has approved, for you to dispatch it. I also send you some accounts of the maritime affairs of France, and the Queen would have you consider among yourselves what other services besides what Vice-Admiral Leake is employed in may at present properly be attempted, that you may be able to give her Majesty better satisfaction when you attend on Sunday night. In case you may not have enough ships (exclusive of Sir C. Shovell's squadron) for those services, speak with him, and let him know that he must attend the Queen at the Cabinet on Sunday, because her Majesty will then speak with you and him about the squadron designed for the Mediterranean.

Depositions of Cecilia Budd and others.

[These depositions are endorsed April 14, on which date warrants issued to arrest Reed and his passengers, which will appear in the Table of Secretaries’ warrants at end of 1703. Possibly these depositions contain the information referred to in those warrants.]

Cecilia Budd:—She went with the Duchess of Powys to Ghent, and has been there five years with her. Came over in the William and Mary yacht (Captain Robinson). The painter (?) and dancing master are lately come into the family.

Marie du Rieux, native of Tournay:—Has been four and a half years with the Duchess. Was never in England before, and only five weeks in Holland. Came in Mr. Reed’s vessel.

Edward Bryer:—Is gentleman to Lord Powys. Has been out of England about five years. Went over with my lord, and came back to fetch my lady. Has been all the time at Ghent except when my lord came to Rotterdam last December, where he lived publicly. Was seized there with some of my lady’s servants and kept under arrest for twenty-four hours, as having the Prince of Wales with them, they taking my lady’s page for him. Came over in Reed’s hoy with thirteen of my lord’s servants and other passengers whom he does not know. Lord Powys waited on the Duke of Marlborough.

* See the Prince’s Council to Nottingham above at 3 April, 1703.

† This deposition is in French.
Mary Ireland:—She is one of Lady Powys's servants, and has lived with her fifteen years. Has only been out of England about five weeks. They came over in the William and Mary yacht with a woman and David Tate, a footman. The rest of my lady's servants and one of her daughters came in Reed's ship. Eleven servants came over with Reed. Some of them were imprisoned at Rotterdam on information that they were bringing over a Prince; but the informer, who was, she thinks, a Frenchman, ran away. My lady's servants were here, except Mary Williams, who was left to look after a small child.

James Baker:—Is Lady Powys's page, and has lived with her about seven years. His father is in France, and his grandfather on his mother's side is living in St. Anne's parish. He is a pawnbroker named Blackmore. Was imprisoned at Rotterdam, but does not know why.

Lewis [?] de Grave, native of Ghent:—Has been about three months footman to Lady Powys. Was never in England before. Came over in Reed's boat with six or seven passengers besides my lady's family.

Peter Lully, a Fleming of Ghent:—Is a music and dancing master and in Lady Powys's employment; teaches the young ladies. Left England about eleven months ago to see his friends. Lived a year with Colonel Wharton and with one Lavarty, a dancing master. Is not naturalised. Was not taken up in Holland. Has lived three or four years in England, before which he lived at Ghent, his native place. Came over in Reed's ship with my lady's servants, and saw six or seven other passengers in her, whom he did not know.

Adrian Duval, native of Rouen*:—Three months ago Lady Powys took him into her service at Ghent as gardener. Has never been in England before. Was arrested on suspicion that her little page was the Prince of Wales. Came over in Reed's ship. Corroborates foregoing as to those on board her.

P. 4. Endd. Ibid, 82.

Elizabeth Fay:—Has been at Ghent two years in the Duchess's family. Came over in Reed's vessel.

Anne Lewis:—Has lived with Lady Powys one and a half years, who sent for her out of Montgomeryshire. Was born by Powys Castle.

Claudius Pinet, born in Picardy:—Has been clerk of the kitchen to Lord Powys at least eighteen years. Is not naturalised. Came over in Reed's vessel; but did not know the other passengers except the family.

Thos. Fay:—Is Lord Powys' coachman. Three years' service with him. Came over in Reed's vessel. Corroborates foregoing.

John [Sharp] Archbishop of York to [Nottingham].

Thanks for your favours in London. I found both your brothers here, and hope to enjoy their company for a month more. As you permitted, I put two or three things before you which I had not time to leave with you, and beg you to remember them.

The Queen has promised Greenwich rectory, when it falls vacant, to Mr. Turner. I recommended him as all whom I spoke to gave the best accounts of him. I enclose the parishioners’ letter in his favour.

Mr. Lany was eleven years chaplain to the late King’s household at Kensington. He had 80l. a year allowed him, which remained unpaid for three years, and had no preferment allowed him, so petitioned the Queen to consider his circumstances. The Queen promised to give him a good living. Pray remember this when occasion arises, if the Queen does not remind you.

The Queen promised to make an allowance of 60l. a year, I think, to Dr. Cockburn at Amsterdam, and told us last week she would order payment of it. Dr. Cockburn has appointed Mr. Sartre, prebendary of Westminster, to receive the money, of which the first quarter is now overdue. If you will remind her Majesty of it, Mr. Sartre will wait on you to receive directions on it.

Pray remember Sir William Sharp, who has nine children, and is very poor. All Scotchmen whom I have spoken to agree as to his integrity and ability to serve the Queen.

Sir George Rooke to [Same].

I arrived here with the ships in the margin† yesterday. Coming from the Gunfleet, I saw several of the yachts making up the river from Holland. They signalled to speak, and said that the day before when they were under the convoy of the Salisbury and Adventure with a great fleet of merchantmen, they met M. Pontie [Pointis] with seven men-of-war 13 leagues E.S.E. of Orford Ness. They think he took the two warships and many of the merchantmen. I immediately detached Rear-Admiral “Binge” with five ships [names given‡] to make for the coast of Flanders and prevent the French ships and prizes from getting into Dunkirk or Ostend, and sent off my 20-oared boat to Rear-Admiral Beaumont in the Downs with orders to make up a squadron at once and sail to the same place. This is all I can do now, and I fear "I had need do more than possibilities to please all people." Beaumont is on the back of the Goodwin working Eastward, but delayed by want of wind when the tide is against him.

I shall work my way to Portsmouth, as I think the squadron for the Bay will be sooner ready by my being there.

Memorandum on the French Naval Preparations at Toulon.

Enclosed gives a list of all the ships they arm out of Toulon this year. Those marked L are in the Levant, those marked C gone westward it is believed for Cadiz. The rest are careened andmarted [masted?] and gunned, wanting only men, which they said they were expecting from West France. In addition to those in this list, there are seven old ships at Toulon which are to be broken up. They are building one ship for the Maltese. With my friend came a Commissary to buy timber, but no one here will sell him aught. They fear no attack by sea on Toulon, and have only a few soldiers, and having only fitted two out of the six half moons of six guns each at the entrance to the port.

Two French men-of-war are expected at the latter end of the next month with eight merchantmen from the Levant. They are to touch at Leghorn, and so to Marseilles. They are very rich, and it is a pity we have no frigates to intercept them. One Padrone Marcus, a Genoese, who was employed in the last war and is a bold and experienced fellow, was freighted this week to go to a river in Languedoc with a letter from a great man. He is to carry the letter till he meets our fleet or a squadron. He binds himself to go as far as Lisbon in his felucca. 'Tis to encourage our fleet to appear on the coast when the country would rise, being "mature for a turn." He is to have 50 pistoles down and 70 at Lisbon, or when he delivers the letter. He navigates with ten men and a boy with Naples colours.

List of vessels follows, shewing:—

1. Twenty-two men-of-war with their guns, crew of men and of boys. In some cases they are marked L or C, as stated above.

2. Four fireships [brulloiz], with similar information to guns and crew.

3. Three storeships [fleutes], with same information.

and the Prince have sent the same orders to Rear-Admiral Beaumont.

A. Sir George Rooke to [the Prince’s Council].

I arrived here this morning with the Royal Sovereign and ten other vessels (names given). Yesterday, as we came from the Gunfleet the yachts made signal to speak with me, and reported that the day before M. Pointy [Pointis] and seven French men-of-war came up with the Salisbury and Adventure and their convoys from Holland, and that they feared the men-of-war as well as several of the merchant ships were taken. Upon this I immediately sent Rear-Admiral Byng, in command of the Ranelagh, Somerset, Torbay, Cambridge and Winchester to lay in the fairway between them and Dunkirk. I saw them join a Dutch Rear-Admiral and four ships before night. I send copy of these orders and of those which I sent to Rear-Admiral Beaumont by my 20-oared boat. As I came through the Gull Streams this morning, I saw him sail about the South Sand head with eight sail of frigates. I directed Admiral Byng to join the Winchester to Rear-Admiral Beaumont, she being a clean ship.

I send enclosed just received from Beaumont.

Pp. ½. Extract. Dated aboard the Royal Sovereign in the Downs, 13 April, 1703. Enclosing further:—

Rear-Admiral Beaumont to Sir George Rooke.

I had your orders to sail last night, and should have done so if I could have got pilots. Am surprised at “the accident,” and hope it may not be so bad as it appears, for I am sure neither Pointy [Pointis] nor any of the men-of-war are out, but only privateers. There was not a ship in Dunkirk road on Thursday night, and on Friday the Dutch Rear-Admiral came past both places and no ship was there. I shall go before Dunkirk and Ostend with eight ships [names given]. The fleet met the enemy so near Ostend that they certainly got in the next morning.

In spite of what I said to them, I find the Governors of the Post Office will not arrange that the post comes into Portsmouth about five or six in the evening, as it does to Deal; so I shall obtain an order from her Majesty for them to arrange it so. I am glad you are better. Thank you for looking out for some good wine for me. It will come very seasonably.

2. To Mr. Edisbury.

Complaints have been received [details] of crowds of poor people, soldiers’ wives and others at Harwich. Command:—To allow soldiers that are left behind, and their wives, or the wives of those now in Holland, to go over there in the packet-boat; and to tell the packet-boat commanders to bring over no one from Holland without a pass from the Commander-in-Chief of the forces there or her Majesty’s special Envoy at the Hague. This will prevent poor people coming over who burden the town. Her Majesty has signed a warrant to the Postmaster General to allow officers of the army to go over free in the packet-boats.

2. To John Noble, Sheriff of Herefordshire.

You did well not to execute sentence on Pritchard and Husbands. Details. The Queen will pardon them.

3. To the Prince’s Council.

I hear by letters from Lisbon of March 23 that Captain Wishart with the men-of-war and merchantmen was to sail thence on last Friday or Saturday fortnight, sending two ships ahead to pick up the merchantmen which were ready at Oporto and Viana. Can you not strengthen that convoy and so prevent such a misfortune (by French ships from Rochfort or Brest), as lately happened to the convoy from Holland?

4. To Mr. Methuen.

Yours of 23rd and 24th received. It is extraordinary that Portugal should propose any new terms after the articles were agreed and only wanted to be put into form; but as she seems to have receded from them, and they are capable of accommodation, probably all will be well before this reaches you. If not, what I have now to write will help towards that result.

You speak of three points in dispute: the time of the payments, the twelve ships to be at Lisbon when no greater [British] fleet is in those seas, and the composition of the debt to the Dutch. The Portuguese Envoy, however, tells me that it is only on the last two points that any difference remains. We have written Mr. Stanhope, and have pressed the Dutch Envoy here to get the Dutch to give in on the matter of the salt. We hope that this point will not delay the conclusion of the main treaty. If it should remain unsettled, no doubt it will be settled later by the interposition of her Majesty.

If the King really insists on twelve ships of war being always in Lisbon &c., you may agree to it, though it will do him little good. If they are to stay literally in the harbour, they can be of little use, and in no case will they be allowed to be under his orders. This has never been permitted. On the other hand, it would be to our interest to have twelve ships, English and Dutch, whose port is Lisbon, always ready. Convenient for cleaning, &c. To such a suggestion you may agree. Moreover, lest the King of Portugal should think this would not be of service to him (though it will give great security to his trade), you may assure his Majesty that the flag commanding officer will have positive orders to protect his coasts against any insults by the French and to protect his interest as far as possible if any French attempt is made on Lisbon by sea.

Count Wratislaw is informed that you and M. Schoneburg have refused to sign the article that no peace shall be made by which the Crown of Spain is left to Philip V or any Prince of the House of Bourbon. I cannot believe that you have refused this. If so, assent to such a clause now, and no doubt M. Schoneburg will do the same.

Inform Lord Secretary Nottingham that steps have been taken by orders to Sir G. Rooke, to strengthen the convoy coming home from Lisbon. Other vessels [details] have been ordered to sea from Plymouth for the same purpose.

Same to Same.

I send for Lord Secretary Nottingham news* from the Adventure, one of the convoys which lately came from Holland. She brought ten merchantmen into the Nore. Others made their way to Holland. There is no news from the Salisbury. The captain of the Adventure fears that she and a great part of the convoys are taken.

Lieutenant Dyas, of the Newcastle, was two days ago on the packet-boat that came from Calais to Dover with prisoners. Her captain said that Ponty [Pointis] and all his squadron are in Dunkirk unrigged, that a St. Malo privateer of 40 guns and 245 men sailed from Dunkirk and took a Dutch man-of-war of 50 guns, and that both of them were taken by three English ships of war off the Texel; that the Emperor is reported to be dead or dangerously sick, and that the Dunkirkers are so poor they cannot fit out privateers, so many being taken.

From the foregoing it is plain that the ships which met our convoys from Holland were privateers only. Probably most of them came out of Ostend.

Hedges to the Prince's Council.

I send for the Lord Admiral's consideration and report papers relating to the embezzlement out of the galleons and a retaken Dutch ship. They come from the Lord Treasurer.

Note.—The enclosed documents were an order by Sir G. Rooke to the commanders of the Queen's hired ships and vessels, dated 15 October, 1702, a letter from the Commissioners of Prizes to Mr. Lowds [Lowndes] with an account of such transport ships as had unladen in London, but had not delivered to the prize ware-houses according to the accounts they gave in to Sir G. Rooke, and the Commissioners of Customs' letter to the Lord High Treasurer with an affidavit from their officers at Plymouth.

1. To the Prince's Council.

The Queen consents to the Queen, Barfleur and Newark being paid off and laid up at their moorings at Chatham, and their forecast men moved into the new frigates fitting out in the Thames.

2. To Captain Atkinson.

Command:—Provide 1,000 pair of shoes to go on board one of Sir C. Shovell's ships.

Three lines. (Hol.) S.P. Dom., Naval 7, 35. Enclosing:—

A. Captain John Robinson to [George Clarke ?].

Besides Lady Powis, I brought over Mrs. Blount with one maidservant. She has a pass from the Queen's Envoy at the Hague (Mr. Stanhope), and an Englishman and two Dutchmen with the like passes; also Mr. Solomon Pereyra and his servant, both Jews, and recommended by Mr. Isaac Pereyra. He had no pass, but is a merchant residing in Lime Street, London. I have brought over no other passengers. If his Royal Highness would see any of these persons, I am told they are to be found on the Exchange of London. When commanded, I shall endeavour to produce them.

Hedges to the Attorney General.

Queen's command:—To prepare for the Queen to see to-morrow a proclamation stating that whereas undesirable foreigners and disaffected persons have come to England from beyond seas, all captains and masters of her Majesty's ships and merchant vessels are forbidden to bring over any person unless he have a pass from the General or Commander-in-Chief of her forces, or from her Majesty's minister to the country where he is taken on board, on pain of prosecution.

Nottingham's Letters.

1. To the Lord Treasurer.

Queen's command:—Order John Forster, the Surveyor at Dover, to restore to Captain Gibson 500l. which he took from him pending directions. Gibson received the money from several people at Calais to pay to the French prisoners here and pay those who had given them credit.

2. To the Commissioners for Sick and Wounded.

Captain Gibson has received from the Sieur la Tour Montfort assurances that on bringing to Calais the fishermen of Dieppe and elsewhere, now prisoners here, he will receive as many English of the same quality in exchange. Queen's command:—Send the captain over with those prisoners.

Inform Count de Mornay that the French ships detained at Guernsey have long been released, and that I know of no prosecution against any Irish taken in French ships. If you hear of any, let me know of it before you mention it to him.

Inform the prisoners at the Gate House that as news has come that the English prisoners in France are better treated, the Queen has ordered their removal thence to the Tower, where they will have liberty of the citadel. The Queen is willing that they 16 Ap. CAPTAIN HOVENDEN WALKER to NOTTINGHAM.

On 12 March some of the forces under General Codrington went ashore at Guadeloupe, about two leagues to the northward of the town, and were very warmly received by the French, who had made breastworks everywhere. Our men, however, forced them from their trenches, and the next day almost all the soldiers and 400 sailors, going ashore, occupied the town and there lodged all the forces—the French having quitted it. The Chichester on the evening before silenced some French batteries which were placed between the town and place of landing.

On the 15th I sent guns and ammunition ashore to open on a fort which the French still had and which commanded the town. They held out till 2 April, when I ordered two ships to open on the Castle, their trenches and line of communication. The Castle had been much battered by the guns ashore; and the next day the French blew up the Castle and fort and retired to the impenetrable woods and mountains, which are their only refuge. Out of these hunger alone will chase them; and our provisions are not enough to do it, as the Resolution has not yet come. In all this fighting, strange to say, not one French prisoner has been taken.

17 Ap. NOTTINGHAM to the COMMISSIONERS of SICK and WOUNDED.

To send the person seized at Dartmouth to Farnham or Plymouth. The French prisoners there will be probably able to say whether he is the Irishman who is gaoler of the prison at Dinant. The English prisoners lately at Dinant may be able to identify him. Take special care that he does not escape.

17 Ap. ELEAZER LE MARCHANT to ———.

Robert Lee is the most fit man in the island to be agent to the Lord High Admiral. He performed that duty well during the late war. An owner or husbandman [?] of privateers should not have that post, as is now the case. Mr. Lee has his accounts regarding prizes ready to send to the Admiralty, but cannot send them for want of a frigate. He dares not trust them to vessels that are "runors," which would probably throw them overboard. Pray inform H.R.H. of all this.

18 Ap. HEDGES to the COMMISSIONERS of CUSTOMS.

I send papers &c. Please consider and report if any masters of the said ships have been guilty of embezzlement, and, if so, see that they are prosecuted before the High Court of Admiralty.

Hedges to Lord Coningsby.

Sends Elizabeth Wanless’ petition, and Queen’s command to pay her 20l. to support her husband: the money to be stopped out of his pay.

Note.—Her petition states that her husband was sent from Ireland to the West Indies, and was, on the voyage, captured by the French on 28 November last. He was carried to Dinant, and has since remained there. Very poor. Contracted debts there, which will detain him if he is released. She prays for a sum for his relief or arrears of his pay.

1. To the Commissioners of Sick and Wounded.

The Queen intends to remove the French officers from the Gate House to the Tower. Go there and report whether there is enough accommodation for them in time for your report to be laid before the Queen at the Cabinet Council to-morrow morning.

2. To the Prince’s Council.

I hear from Pisa that one Captain Pickering brought pitch, tar &c. under Swedish colours to Marseilles, and that a ship, supposed to be his, was coming into that port on March 31. Give orders to arrest any ship commanded by this officer pending inquiries.

Hedges to William Jennings and Thomas Renda.

To assist bearer, who is warranted to arrest Richard Paine and other deserters from Lieutenant-General Stewart’s regiment, and believed to be in or near Wallingford. They are to be sent, if need be, from constable to constable up here.

Same. Nottingham’s Letters.

1. To the Commissioners of Sick and Wounded.

The commanders of French merchant ships who are prisoners at Farnham complain that they are treated as common seamen. Queen’s command:—They must be treated with the distinction with which Englishmen of their quality are treated in France.

Remove the French prisoners from the Gate House to the Tower. No fees for lodging &c. to be charged them there.

2. To the Commissioners of Sick and Wounded.

The Queen will not accept the service of any French prisoners, however anxious they may be to enter it; but if any are real Protestants and want to stay in England, do not send them back to France when exchanging prisoners. None, even though Protestants, are to be released without her Majesty's special order.

3. To Edmund Maine, Esq., at Berwick.

Queen's approval. Continue your care in her service.

4. To the Prince's Council.

Queen's command:—Take no French into her service, that the French may have no excuse for forcing English into theirs.

P. 4. Ibid.

5. To Colonel Ellis, Lieutenant Governor of Guernsey.

Leave has been granted to you to come over to Bath for your health. You will, of course, take care that the Queen's service does not suffer by your absence.

6. To Captain Gibson.

Queen's command:—Not to bring over from Calais any English master taken by the French who ransomed his ship.

7. To the Commissioners of Transport.

The Queen approves your proposal for making serviceable some beds, rugs and pillows returned from the late expedition to Spain at a cost of 2s. 6d. each. Take steps accordingly.

8. To the Commissioners of Sick and Wounded.

There are about 400 French prisoners at Guernsey and will probably be more. They are more numerous than the garrison, and there are not sufficient victuals for them, which is dangerous to the island. Consider means of moving the prisoners who are there, or may come there, to some other place. Details.

9. To the Prince's Council.

The Queen approves the enclosed letter from the Council of Trade and Plantations with regard to seamen assisting in the fortification of St. John's, Newfoundland, and their estimate for some stores necessary for the boom there. Queen's command:—Lay these particulars before the Prince, that he may give the necessary orders therein.

Also details of anchors, chains and iron asked for. The cost of these is 23l. 15s.

Wt. 3880.
10. To the Lord Treasurer.

By command—I send you an estimate regarding the expenses of laying the boom at St. John’s, received [&c., as foregoing], so that you may give orders for sending this money as you think necessary.

11. To M. de Pimont.

You will be given in exchange for any Englishman of like quality to yourself. When I hear that the French Court agrees to this, I will do all I can to hurry the matter.

12. To the Count de Mornay.

Having told you that nothing was wanting for the completion of a cartel but that you should have a full power in proper form to treat, I am surprised at the power which you have sent me. This is the only cause of delay. The English officers would not dare to take French sailors into service in their ships (which M. de Pontchartrain supposes to be the cause of delay), for the Queen has given a positive order that this shall not be done. Not even the poor French Protestant prisoners, who prefer captivity in England to the sufferings which they undergo in France [are allowed to enter her service]; and the Queen hopes that, this being so, the French King’s order against the enlistment of English prisoners will be extended to his fleet as well as to his army.

As for the French prisoners, though the Queen has heard complaints that the English prisoners in France are nearly starving, she has voluntarily ordered that deductions made from the pay of the French prisoners here for their food be restored. You (the French officers here) will be treated according as the Queen hears that the English officer prisoners are treated in France. Please make any suggestion you can as to how the Meantime keep it very secret. Your expenses will be paid and your trouble rewarded.

MEMORIAL by the LORD HIGH ADMIRAL to the QUEEN IN COUNCIL.

Frequent complaints are made to me that when her Majesty's ships touch at Jersey or Guernsey the crews desert to serve in the privateers. The Governors and Lieutenant Governors of those islands should be ordered to search their respective islands, and all privateers thereto belonging, with care for such deserters and to arrest and replace them on one of her Majesty's ships.

Receive herewith several French officers, prisoners of war. Queen's command:—To accommodate them according to their quality and allow them to walk on the parade at proper times.

2. To the Prince's Council.

Colonel Collier, the Lieutenant-Governor, reports that, according to order, the Esperance de Derneville has been released in Jersey, but that the master was first compelled to give a bond to the agent who cares for the Lord High Admiral's share of prizes, that if 30 liverets was to be paid, being the appraisement of the boat, it should be done. Queen's command:—To cancel and deliver up the bond.

3. To the Commissioners of Sick and Wounded.

I send a warrant and letter* for receiving the French [officers] prisoners into the Tower and a warrant to the Keeper of the Gate House to receive them. It might be well if you saw them safe to the Tower, if possible, to-day.

24 Ap. THOMAS DUNN and RALPH ELMSTALL to JOHN WYCH.

Since our last we hear only that the "Russe" has a numerous army near his frontier, and, according to the best information, will certainly besiege this place. There is nothing to hinder them, Slippenbach's army being dispersed and Croncort's the same. We hear of no succour from Swede-land; "yet is thought" nothing will be attempted till the grass is grown, which will be in about five weeks, although they begin already to make some small ravages. They have also an army by Notteburg, with which, it is reported, that they will attack Nyen. If a sudden peace is not made in Poland, the King of Swedeland's affairs in these parts will be in a miserable condition. Quantities of goods lie at Wyborg. Considering the danger in loading if the Russe takes either place, and as we have nothing to show that we are friends to the Russe, we ask you to get our passes from the Queen of England. We have herewith ordered our friend Mr. Rimington to make good to you any disbursements which you may incur in connexion therewith. At the beginning of the war, several of our fellow countrymen had passes from the late King, which were much respected by the Russes. We hear that England and Holland may send a fleet into the East sea to compel Sweden to make peace. If so, it will not be possible for us to stay here, for the inhabitants will be inveterate against us. We should be glad to hear from you if this fleet will come, also what chance there is of peace with the Russe.

P.S.—No ships are yet here, but they are expected daily, the sea being clear of ice.

24 Ap. NOTES of FEES due to the LIEUTENANT of the TOWER of LONDON.

On the date in margin the following noblemen and gentlemen were committed prisoners to the Tower. The usual fee to the Lieutenant is 100l. for a nobleman and 50l. for a gentleman, so that in all 1,200l. is due.

A. Description of M. Pierre De La Touche.

He is a French refugee of merit and has been here seventeen years. He is of good character, and was Master of the Pages to the late Queen, in which employment he acquitted himself with much honour. He is of Saumur, one of the towns in France where they speak French best. Seven years ago he wrote a book on the art of speaking French well, which he dedicated to the Duke of Gloucester. He also understands well the humanities, geography, history, fortification and other things which qualify him to translate the Gazette well.

You have now only to give your orders to whom you please to be your agent here. If you appoint me, I will serve you well.

I will at once forward the passports you asked for when I receive them; but whether they come or not, send the packet-boat, for the Commissary has given me an order under his hand for her safety.

P.S.—I enclose the agreement for the exchange of prisoners, which I have received from M. de St. Sulpice since I wrote the above. If you disapprove of anything in it, let me know, that I may have it changed. A. Declaration by M. de St. Sulpice.

As Commissary of the Marine in the Department of St. Malo, I declare that I have power from the Court of France to give English prisoners who are in France in exchange for French prisoners sent from England, man for man and quality for quality, giving to the masters who shall bring French prisoners 10 livres for freight, and provisions for each prisoner. If the English ships bringing over prisoners are kept more than eight days, 3 livres per ton per month shall be paid them for demurage, and 60 livres for the pay and provision of the master and 24 livres for the pay and provision of each sailor. During their stay the master and crew shall be kept at the expense of the French Government, and shall not be imprisoned, and the whole shall be managed according to the cartel in the late war. The Commissioners are requested to send over first the oldest prisoners, and I shall do the same here.

1. Sir Cloudesly to be left discretion as to when, in the month of September, the fleet shall return from the Mediterranean.

2. Sir Cloudesly to have leave to send away one to treat with the Governments on the coasts of Barbary. Your instruction to be framed accordingly.

3. You are desired to send to the Turkey Company and adjust with them the time for their ships' return to the rendezvous. My Lords think it should be as soon as possible, but leaving to Sir Cloudesly's discretion to enlarge the time if he thinks this can be done with safety.

NOTTINGHAM'S LETTERS.

1. To the Prince's Council.

I send you copy of the Articles intended with Portugal in regard to the fleet that you may be better able to give your opinion on them when you attend the Cabinet Council at my office at six this evening; and, that this matter may be settled consistently with her Majesty's honour and the satisfaction of the King of Portugal, bring with you an account of how the command has been settled on previous occasions when the English fleet has acted as auxiliary, and particularly of the regulation made when the fleet went to Barcelona.

2. To the Pensioner [Grand Pensionary].

Command:—To tell you that we are informed that the people of France as well as in the Cevennes are well disposed for a rising if they would be supported in it—particularly about Bordeaux. The project for this support, which has been submitted to her Majesty, can be carried out with 12,000 men, especially at this time of the year, when the fleet is at sea, or ought to be so. But as it is impossible for the Queen and the States General to raise so many men in time for such an expedition, so it is to be wished that the expense thereof should be avoided if, by any other means, the design can be pursued. The only alternative is to take such a number of men from our united forces under the Duke of Marlborough. We hope your affairs may be in so good a posture that these may be embarked and on our coast by the end of June, after which there will be two months for them to act before they need be sent to Portugal (if that Treaty is successful, as we hope), and the design of sending them to Portugal will serve to cloak the intermediate design against France. This will in itself divert the arms of France, and, if it induces a revolt, will be very fatal to the French King, and in the meantime it is the surest method of diverting him from those advantages he has in most places against the Allies. The Queen has therefore commanded me to write on this matter to you, as I have done to the Duke of Marlborough, and earnestly to recommend it for you to help, and hopes that you will resolve on it at once and carry it out with vigour.

Permit me to add that I have long thought that no war can be so dangerous to France as one which is carried on in this way, i.e., "by a fleet and an army accompanying it, and this I say, although there were not such a prospect as there is of the French themselves concurring with us. I think the reasons for this assertion are so plain that I need not mention them, and the last war is an unhappy instance of the truth of it." I leave the matter in your hands, the project to be worked out by you in concert with the Duke of Marlborough. Pray let me know what we are to expect, that no time may be lost on our part.

3. To the Duke of Marlborough.

Sends copy of foregoing, and discusses its substance. The force promised to Portugal is 10,000 foot, 1,000 horse and 1,000 dragoons, to be mounted in Portugal. Proceeds:—This is thought to be the least number requisite for this design. If so many men cannot be spared from the armies under your command, if the States will send 6,000 of the troops under their pay and so many of the troops in her Majesty's pay as will make up two Irish and two Scotch regiments and one of French to be raised here to the like number of 6,000, this will answer the end and in some degree obviate the objection they may have of sending away the whole 12,000.

If, however, the States cannot be prevailed on to send so great a number, and you think it not safe to send them without replacing them by an equal number, which may be had from the Princes of Germany, then, to further so great a service and prevent the expenditure on our fleet from being wasted, you may concur with them [the States General] in any Treaties they make for troops in lieu of those which shall be sent on this service. All of these are to be at the joint and equal expense of her Majesty and the States.

4. To the Commissioners of Sick and Wounded.

Queen's command:—Send a vessel to St. Malo for exchange of prisoners.

Four lines. S.P. Dom., Entry Book 104, p. 279.

Hedges to Sir George Rooke.

Besides the instructions which you have from his Royal Highness, my Lords have advised the Queen to give you those enclosed, which I send by her command. You will find by them that you are not only to annoy the enemy, but to find out as best you can what further services will be practicable in case that by the end of June (by which time it is expected you should return), the Dutch squadron for the Channel service should join you with 10,000 land forces on board.

The descent according to the enclosed project and the destroying the saltpans are the principal services thought on at present, concerning which her Majesty would be informed as soon as you can. The other paper came with the foreign letters to-day, and is sent for your information, and was, I believe, partly the occasion of despatching your instructions to-night. If I had had time I should have told you, before it was signed, what is now sent you in writing. Should you have any suggestions as to how anything may be better turned or framed, I will try to get it done accordingly and send it after you. "I most heartily wish you success in all you undertake."

Instructions to Sir G. Rooke.

1. You are to burn, sink, destroy, harry &c. the ships and coasts of France and Spain and the saltpans, and to inform yourself as best you can [&c., as in the preceding letter, par. 1. re arrival of Dutch force &c.]. Get the best information as to how such designs may be put in execution.

2. Inform yourself as well as you can of the inclinations to rebellion of the people at and about Bordeaux and how they may best be supported; also of the passage into the river of Bordeaux, and how practicable it is to enter into it, and with what sort of ships, and of the best means for making a descent in or near that river.

In putting these instructions in force, you are, as often as you think fit, to call a Council of flags and captains, and act according to the resolutions that shall be taken there; and to proceed

About

REAR-ADMIral Whetstone to [HEDGES].
I hope my letters of 16 February arrived by H.M.S. Bristol, which I sent to convey home some merchantmen and the prisoners Captains Kirkby, Wade and Constable. All the captains advised this, fearing that, in the consternation caused by the fire, they might escape. They sailed on 14 February. I sailed with them as high as Hispaniola, and afterwards went in search of some merchant ships and a convoy from France, of which I had information. Cruised for five weeks in search of them and then looked into Port Louis, where there was only one, formerly chased in by our cruisers. Relates his movements in search of French, and detachment of Captain Vincent in the Defiance.
Captured or drove ashore three privateers. Burnt or sunk vessels in the Cue. The French compute their loss by these burnings &c. at 18,000l. Further movements and detachments. Receipt of his Royal Highness’s despatch of 23 January off East of Jamaica. Is fitting out, expecting reinforcements from Windward, and hopes to be ready to execute his Royal Highness’s orders.
Does not give details, lest the merchant ship which takes this should be captured.

NOTTINGHAM to PAUL METHUEN.
Your father and the Portuguese Envoy give such good assurances of the King of Portugal’s intention to enter the Grand Alliance, that the Queen sends this express, that no time may be lost in perfecting it. Directions are enclosed, and when
M. Schonberg sees them (and you must in all things act in concert with him), it is probable he will consent to them. The things he objected to were so slight that I wonder your father despaired of convincing him, and left before the treaty was concluded.

* See at 31 March, 1702. Supra, pp. 15, 16.

I send enclosed a copy of the project to which the King of Portugal would have agreed if M. Schonberg had done so, but the 19th and 20th articles have been altered here and are sent as altered. To the 17th words have been added which I hope will be as satisfactory to the King of Portugal as if the words were inserted which his Majesty desired.* These could never be assented to, for no English fleet or squadron has ever been subject to any orders but those of the Sovereign. We have persuaded the Envoy on this point, who said he would write accordingly; so we hope his master will be persuaded also.

As to the 19th and 20th articles, they explain themselves. You, who know how jealous we are of our honour at sea, will recognise that it is impossible to subject our ships to the command of any other. I may mention, to satisfy Portugal, that when the English and Swedish squadrons were joined, as is mentioned in this article, the King of Sweden was aboard his fleet in person. For the same reason similar changes have been made in articles 6 and 7 of the project of defensive and offensive alliance (No. 2).

Details as to the form of signing the Treaty and precedence in signing. Refers to the precedent of the Marriage Treaty of King Charles II. Proceeds:—The Queen does not wish to claim anything against precedent, nor to yield any point of honour which her ancestors enjoyed. You should inform yourself of what was done in the case of King Charles II's Marriage Treaty. If it was then yielded that King Charles and the King of Portugal should be interchangeably first named, we cannot insist on anything else now. If the precedent is doubtful and Portugal insists on her contention, then it will be best that all the parts of the Treaty should not be signed by all the ministers, but that the Portuguese minister should sign parts to be given to the ministers of all the Allies, and the ministers of the Allies sign a part to be given to the Portuguese minister. A declaration should be added that if the practice has been different it shall be set right in the ratification.

You must look on the enclosed as instructions to you for concluding the Treaties. The captain of the ship has orders to wait till you dismiss him, for the Queen expects that a few days will shew whether the King of Portugal will sign or not. Your father thinks that he will not sign till the question of the salt has been adjusted. You must press him for a definite answer whether he will or will not sign, on these terms, when the salt question is adjusted, and send away this ship with his answer. We expect daily letters from Holland, which will bring orders to M. Schonberg about the salt.

I have had your instructions amended, to correct an error [details], and signed again by the Queen. There is an additional article re calling Councils of War, according to whose resolutions you are to carry out your instructions. As to getting information, you are to do no more than find out the state of mind of the people and what advantages may be gained on the coasts. You are not obliged to make any descent, or put any men ashore, unless a Council of War approves such a step. Details. I am sorry you have gout.

3 May. Whereas the Anne of Bridgewater (John Gruzilier, master) arrived from Bideford at Teneriffe on 15 May, 1702 (n.s.), laden with wheat and consigned to Richard Mead, of that island, and whereas having unladen such wheat, she was set to freight by Gruzilier and Mead to Dr. William Davies, also resident there, to go hence to Fuerteventura, and there to load with orchill and return to England, on the said Davies’ account, and accordingly sailed for Fuerteventura on 25 or 26 May, and arrived there the 28th and began to load the aforesaid orchill, but on 2 June following was seized by the Spaniards in the said island, and the master and all the crew made prisoners, and the ship, her fittings &c., and all the orchill on her or about to be laden, declared confiscated, and because during the war no witnesses can be examined to verify the premises:—Therefore Michael Bigger appeared at Davies’ request before me, her Majesty’s Consul in the Canary Islands, and, on interrogatories, deposed as follows:—

Was resident here when the Anne arrived in May, 1702. Agreed to go as factor for Davies to Fuerteventura to load orchill on the Anne for Davies’ account. Went there accordingly in May, 1702, and purchased 1,642 quintals of orchill, which was worth 39,260 ryalls. Of this 230 quintals were put on board the ship and the rest lay ready on shore for embarking. On 2 June the maestro of the ship was seized by Spanish officers (names and details given), and all her provisions and tackle, and all the orichill on her or on shore, were also seized. They arrested all the crew on her and deponent, and also seized scales, money &c. [details], all the property of Davies, all of which were made prize and confiscated to the King of Spain by the Reprisalia. All this was done before war was proclaimed between England and Spain, which was not declared in Madrid till 19 June or here till 9 August.

Certificate by James Thornehull and John Thomas.

They certify that Roope is her Majesty's Consul at the Canaries, and should be credited. They know all the parties and facts mentioned above and corroborate the foregoing statement. Corroborate foregoing statement. The Spanish officers who seized the Anne were armed with daggers and pistols. As the Spanish authorities will not suffer any attestation or protest to be made by any public notary, this testimony was procured by Davies that the matter of fact may appear to any assured or others concerned in the said ship or cargo.

NOTTINGHAM'S LETTERS.

1. To Count de Mornay.

The Queen has given orders regarding your lodging and the payments asked of you, which I am sure will be carried out. La Touche was imprisoned not because he escaped, but because he behaved in a way which rendered him liable to be treated as a spy, and not as a prisoner of war. I have had his chains taken off. The jailor put them on without orders. Details.

The Queen approves your suggestion that the master-gunner at Jamaica be recalled as no longer useful. You are to give orders accordingly.

I send a fresh report received from the Commissioners of Trade and Plantations as to what more is necessary for the boom at St. John's, Newfoundland, with the estimated cost, to be laid before the Lord Treasurer that he may order the money.

P. 4. Ibid. Enclosing:—

1. The report aforesaid.

The boom is very necessary to protect shipping and the country, and the person who suggested it, who seems capable, should be sent out by this convoy for the more speedy completing of the work. The additional charge proposed for his attendance and for materials which he proposes to take out is 75l. 6s. over and above the former estimate of 158l. 10s.

2. Estimate by John Roope of the proposed increased expenses for materials and wages in connexion with the boom at St. John's.

The materials and implements (axes, screws, saws, sledges, rope &c.) come to 23l. 6s.; and the proposed increase in Roope's wages [details given] is 52l. 6s. 0d., and he asks for an order to the Captain or Governor of the forest in Newfoundland to give him 25 or 30 men, as he may want them. Pp. 14.

4. To the Prince's Council.

Command:—To write to the Earl of Orford for, and send in, copies of the instructions and orders as to command and councils given him when the fleets under his command were to join that of Spain, and [to send] the same for the time when the English and Dutch fleet under Sir G. Rooke joined with that of Sweden.
These will be laid before her Majesty, who thinks Mr. Methuen should be informed of them.

COMMISSION to SIR CLOUDESLEY SHOVELL.

We have thought it fit to appoint a proper person to renew and confirm in our name the Treaty of Peace &c. made between our predecessors and the respective cities and kingdoms of Algiers, Tunis and Tripoli, and to make the proper alterations therein and additions thereto, and to conclude a peace in our name with the Emperor of Morocco, and, meantime, if necessary, to prolong the Treaty made [with Morocco] by Captain George Delevall, which has been already several times renewed and confirmed. We commission Sir Cloudesly Shovell, or such person as he shall authorise, to treat for and conclude such a peace with the Emperor of Morocco, or his appointed ministers, and with the Governors of Algiers, Tunis and Tripoli. Promise to confirm, in usual form.

Also warrant of same date to the Lord Keeper to affix the Great Seal to the foregoing Commission.

P. ¾. Overwritten as the Commission above, and countersigned (copy) by Lord Secretary Nottingham. Ibid, pp. 40, 41.

INSTRUCTIONS to SIR CLOUDESLEY* SHOVELL, Kt., Admiral of the White and in command of her Majesty’s ships employed and to be employed in the Mediterranean Sea.

1. On arriving in the Mediterranean you are, notwithstanding any previous orders, to go to the coast of France over against Pequais and Porto Cete, and if you see any persons on the shore, observe if they signal to you. If not, signal to them according to the annexed paper. If you find they are friends, send a boat and bring aboard as many of them as desire to come to inform you of the condition of the Cevennois. If you find they can securely carry away shoes, arms and ammunition on shore, to their companions in arms in that country, give these to them in such quantity as you think fit, out of the stores sent with you, which are principally intended for them. Give them also money, as you think proper and needful.

2. Enquire particularly if there is any possibility of destroying the salt works at Pequais, and, if you find it practicable, land marines for the purpose, taking with them any Frenchmen who will go with them and may conduct our troops to the performance of this service.

3. Having performed these services, or as much of them as is practicable, you are to proceed to Palermo in Sicily and observe and signal [as before]. If you find it feasible you are to co-operate with them in "the attempt,"* assisting them with so many of our ships, bomb vessels and marines, as are necessary, and in such other ways as you think proper.

4. If you succeed in this attempt and find it practicable to take Messina, "you are in that and all other things to assist them in freeing themselves from the slavery of France and the present Spanish Government, and to reduce that island to the dominion of the House of Austria."

5. You are then to proceed to Naples and the coast of that kingdom, and, on signals given, to assist the people to shake off the French and Spanish power in favour of the House of Austria.

[6.] If any part of the Emperor's army should be in the Kingdom of Naples, you are as far as practicable to co-operate with the officer in command of it for the reduction of Naples or any other part of that kingdom, and, for that purpose, land our marines and supply them with mortars and cannon out of our ships, which you are to place on the land carriages you have with you; and in all ways "to support and assist the Emperor's army or any others that declare for the House of Austria."

[7.] When on the way to Sicily, send in a ship to Legorne to bring off any person who is there, and sent by Prince Eugene to tell you of his movements, so that you may better know the Prince's plans and better concur in any attempt he shall make against the enemy. Correspond with the Prince for this purpose and co-operate with him in all things in which it is fit for our ships to join.

Having performed these services, or as many of them as you have strength and time to do, pursue your other instructions for your return to England.

Pp. 2. S.P. Dom., Entry Book 209, pp. 41–43. Followed by:—

Signal for knowing our friends.

They on shore to make and continue three smokes at once in the day and as many fires in the night, about one rod distant one from another, and to continue them till they are answered from our ship or boat by setting three fuzes on fire one after the other. If we make the signal first, we will light out three fuzes all together, one at each end and the other in the middle of the ship or boat, which is to be answered by three smokes by day and as many fires by night.

[FURTHER] INSTRUCTIONS TO SIR CLOUDESLY SHOVELL.

1. When you arrive in the Mediterranean Sea you are, when you think it most consistent with the other part of your instructions, to go with our fleet, or detach one or more ships, to the coast of Barbary, authorising by a deputation under your hand and seal &c. [details], our Consuls at Tunis, Algiers and Tripoli, or such other person on our fleet as you think fit, to treat with the governments of those places for renewing the

* See next paragraph as to what it was.
Treaties we have with them, and conclude the same on the terms we mentioned in our instructions herewith, and "thereupon to make to them the several presents which we have ordered to be sent with you for that purpose."

2. If you can prevail with these Governments to declare war against France, you shall, on such declaration and some hostility actually committed, give such presents as you judge proper and expedient to induce them to it.

3. In case of such a rupture with France, and that the Dutch Admiral has orders to treat a peace with them, you are to assist him in that negociation.

4. Some time before you return, detach two or more ships to Legorn with orders to the commander to take or destroy any of the enemy's ships going into or coming out of that port, notwithstanding any agreement made by our Consul for the neutrality of the said port, declaring the reason for your action to be that the French have not observed the same neutrality, and that the Great Duke has not done right to our subjects; as you will be fully informed by our Envoy, Sir Lambert Blackwell, on that account. The commander [of the detached ships] shall demand the immediate removal of the Governor of Legorn.

5. If Sir Lambert has not obtained satisfaction for [William] Plowman, gent., and our other subjects interested with him, the commander is to require it to be made at once.

6. He is further to demand a positive declaration and assurance from the Great Duke that for the future no seamen, our subjects, shall be detained in his dominions against their will, but shall be permitted to embark on our ships or those of our Allies. If these demands are not satisfied then or sooner, you shall return to Legorne and by all means exact reparation, both for the said injuries and for the damages we shall sustain in exacting it.

7. If you detach any ships into the Adriatic Sea, order the commander to take every opportunity to destroy any French ships which may be in the Venetian ports, directing them to require from the State of Venice a release of our subjects who are detained in their service in their ships, galleys or dominions. Direct him, if this is refused, to take such Venetian subjects as he can out of their ships and keep them till ours are delivered up, or bring them to England.

8. He is to require immediate satisfaction for the ship which they suffered to be burnt by the French at Malamoco, of which he will receive fuller information from Consul Broughton at Venice. In case of refusal, take reprisals and order the commander of the Adriatic detachment to do the same.

CIRCULAR LETTER sent to the CONSULS at ALGIERS and elsewhere.

Her Majesty has ordered a squadron of ships to proceed to the Mediterranean. Her Majesty expects you to correspond as often as you can with Sir Cloudesly Shovell, who is in command, giving him an account of all matters which occur in your parts, and especially of such as will enable him to protect her Majesty's subjects and those of her allies, and to annoy the enemy.

If you have any account of the enemy's ships at Toulon, Gibraltar or Cadiz, you are as soon as possible to send it to Sir Cloudesly.

As you are to assure the Government of Algiers that her Majesty's officers have orders to protect their ships that shall come to our fleet and convoys, and that therefore, as they need fear no injury from the Dutch who are joined with us, so it is but just that they should not attempt to do any injury to the Dutch whilst they are under the protection of our fleet and convoys. You are to acquaint the Government with this, which the Queen thinks a very fair arrangement.

Note.—This letter was written to the Governments of Algiers, Tunis and Tripoli; the two first paragraphs to the Consuls at Genoa and Legorn, and the first paragraph only to the Consuls at Venice and Zant.

Nottingham to Sir Cloudesley Shovell.

You will receive herewith a commission to treat with Algiers, Tunis and Tripoli [see above, p. 705] for renewing the peace, and some instructions for that purpose; also instructions for services to be done in the Mediterranean [see above, pp. 705–6]; also some advices from Genoa with a plan of Toulon and account of the ships there [see above, pp. 627, 681], and some letters to the Consuls in the Mediterranean and those on the Barbary coast [pp. 707–8].

You may expect a friendly reception on the Barbary coast, and even the Dutch will be permitted to come into their ports with French or Spanish prizes, they doing no hostility in sight of the Barbary ports and putting up English colours.

You have already received a draught of Buccari in the Adriatic Sea, and I have to tell you that at Ragusa you will be well received and supplied, for money, with what the place affords.

You are directed to go first to Palermo, because the people there are disposed to revolt and expect your assistance.

The extra 2,000l. you will receive from the Lord Treasurer is intended for any occasion of land service, but especially for the Cevennois, if you can have any occasion of sending it to them.

Referring to the signals [see above, p. 706], they may be made on the French coast by people who are your enemy; so the word by which you will know your friends is "Londres."

The officers of Ordnance will describe to you the arms sent with you, which are chiefly intended for the Cevennois, as also are the 1,000 pair of shoes.
The Maltese have for some time treated our ships ill in the matter of provisioning, and now refuse to let Dutch privateers with prizes into their port. This is a breach of neutrality, and you must endeavour to secure for us in this matter treatment as good as our enemies enjoy, both for England and Dutch men-of-war, privateers and merchantmen.

Last and important. You cannot expect to hear from hence of any preparations the enemy may make to intercept you on your return at Cadiz. I therefore think it very advisable that when you return to Leghorn you should hire some neutral vessel to go on before you to the Straits and bring you back an account of what ships of war may be at Cadiz and Gibraltar for your better guidance. I wish you all success.

The Queen, on hearing of your indisposition, gave Admiral Churchill instructions to take the command of the expedition which you were to have taken. Hearing from you at Portland that you are better, she commands you, if you find yourself able, of which you alone are to judge, to keep the command, though Admiral Churchill’s instructions are of a later date than yours. This is sent for security, though you and Admiral Churchill would no doubt have so read your instructions even without this letter.

ADDITIONAL INSTRUCTIONS to SIR CLOUDESLEY SHOVELL.

These are for your guidance in making treaties with Algiers, Tunis and Tripoli, pursuant to your Commission [above, at 4 May, p. 705]. For this purpose we send you copies of the [existing] Treaties with them and also of the confirmation of the Treaty made in August, 1700, with Algiers by Captain Munden and Consul Cole, and of some additional articles concluded with Tunis and Tripoli, respectively, by Vice-Admiral Aylmer and Consul Baker. Consul Cole has renewed the Treaty with Algiers since our accession in general terms only. On consideration therefore of the Treaties with Algiers, we find that Captain Munden confirmed a Treaty which in one point differed from what had formerly been agreed on concerning passes. We would have you stipulate in this matter that, in case of a ship having no pass, the ship shall be confiscated and the master may be detained, but that all the other seamen and the passengers shall be free, and that all the goods shall be restored without any embezzlement. You are to insert therein the second additional article concluded by Vice-Admiral Aylmer with Tunis in May, 1699, for preventing our subjects being seduced to turn Turks, a copy of which is herewith. This is a better article than that in the Treaty made in 1676 by Sir J. Narborough with Tripoli.

You will also have copies of four articles concluded by Consul Baker with Tripoli, in October, 1694, and confirmed on 1 June, 1699, by Vice-Admiral Aylmer. Insert them in the Treaty with that Government, and in all other respects renew the Treaty made with Sir J. Narborough in 1676.

In confirming the Treaty made by Consul Goodwin with Tunis in October, 1688, the Governors of that City and Kingdom promised within three months to reduce the customs on English goods to three per cent., and not raise them again, or else at the end of six months to raise the customs on the French nation to ten per cent. It having been afterwards agreed by Vice-Admiral Aylmer (absolutely and without reference to any other nation) that for the future English subjects should not pay more than three per cent, and this having been practised in the time of the late Dey, you must insist on its continuance and upon its being expressly stipulated for in the Treaty; since the present Dey has threatened to raise the customs again [against English goods] to ten per cent unless he be gratified in his unreasonable demands for arms, guns &c., to be sent to him.

Take care to insert in this Treaty the second additional article referred to above, and concluded in May, 1699, by Vice-Admiral Aylmer.

Several articles in the Treaties with Algiers and Tripoli do not appear in our Treaty with Tunis. Endeavour to get as many of them put in as you think right and advantageous to us. These are the things which at present occur to us; but if you, on the place, or on getting further advice, think that some further points should be added, we leave it open to you to make such articles in that behalf as you think proper.

Endeavour to obtain these alterations; but if you cannot do so, confirm the Treaties as they now stand.

Hedges to Sir Cloudesly Shovell.

I send your instructions, and will send further explanations if you desire them.

P. ¾. S.P. Dom., Entry Book 208, p. 81. Enclosing:—

Instructions to Sir Cloudesley Shovell, Admiral of the White, and Admiral and Commander-in-Chief of her Majesty's ships in the Mediterranean.

1. Having seen the merchant ships under your convoy close to Lisbon, Leghorn and Genoa, and having allotted particular convoys to Smyrna, Constantinople and Scanderoon, and sent away the Turkey trade, you are to sail with the remainder of the ships and with the Dutch ships under your command to the coast of Naples and Sicily. Having arrived there, you shall call a council of English and Dutch flag officers any colonels of English and Dutch marines and land forces on board and there consider how best to help any forces of the Emperor which you may find in those parts with marines, mortars and guns, and with the ships, in any attempt which those forces, or any others in favour of the House of Austria, may make. Join with them in annoying the enemy according to any resolutions which such Council of War may take.

2. Use all opportunities to sink or destroy the enemy's ships and stores, and to attack Toulon, Cadiz, or any other place on the enemy's coast, so as such attack shall not prejudice the main service on which you are employed.

3. If you should hear that there are any considerable magazines of the French near Genoa which may be destroyed by landing a party, and find, by a Council of War, that these may be destroyed by landing the marines at Porto Spezie or elsewhere, you are to make the attempt. Assist the landing and re-embarking of our men in all possible ways, so far as consistent with the safety of our ships.

4. If you capture store ships, you may use the stores after they have been valued by a prize officer, or some other officer appointed by you. A just account of such stores used must be kept and returned to the High Court of Admiralty. Part of the stores, as you think fit, may be given to refresh and encourage the men. You may dispose of such other prizes as you take, with the privity of the prize officer, provided the cargoes are perishable and cannot be preserved without great inconvenience to the fleet. If any cannot be sold, and are an incumbrance to the fleet, you may destroy them with the advice of the flag officers and the privity of the prize officer. An exact account to be kept in all cases.

5. If you are in want of water or of fresh provisions and can get them on the enemy's coast, you are empowered to make a truce and treat with them on those occasions.

6. You may give rewards for extraordinary services out of the contingent money for the fleet.

7. You shall treat with the subjects of the Grand Signor and with all other Princes and States who are in amity with us or the States General; and see that the Dutch do not molest any who are in amity with us, even though they be not so with the States General. If you are ill-treated by any neuter nation, and find that they do not treat you as well as they do the French, or act unfriendly towards you, you may demand satisfaction for such treatment, and, if it is refused, take it by force, provided it is done in your return.

8. After doing all the service you can for us and our allies, you shall, at a Council of War, consider the best time for returning home, and the best means of getting back all men guns and stores which have been landed, unless it be judged best for the service of our allies to leave such stores or guns where they are. You shall consider the best means for annoying the enemy on the way home, and put into execution the plan resolved on, providing for picking up the convoy detachments and for bringing back as many ships as possible under your convoy.

9. If you hear that any French ships are in the "Adriatique" and molest the Emperor's convoys for Italy, you may, if it is judged safe for your ships after such a detachment is made, send thither such number of ships as may be thought expedient by a Council of War, to destroy any French or enemy ships "in any place or port within that gulf, except the roads and ports of the Grand Segnor, giving the commander-in-chief of those ships instructions to inform you of the condition of the port of Buccari and the forwardness of the fortifications thereof, and with what safety any of our ships may remain there"; and giving him orders when and where to rejoin you.

10. Communicate your instructions to the Dutch Admiral, and ask for his.

Details as to receipt of letters. Has been ill. Proceeds:—

I have been at Antegua and had to supply the garrison with common powder for their musquets, having no small powder. Their arms were very bad, only 50 flints being serviceable out of 1,000. The musquet balls which I was able to give them were taken out of partridge shot-cases. I had to stop the victuallers going to Jamaica, otherwise we must have run short of provisions, and have made for Jamaica instead of "Gardeloupe." A collision between a transport ship and mine forced me in to Mountserat for repairs. We anchored at the north part of "Gardeloupe" on March 9, and after landing a small party, which met no opposition, we came in nearer to the town on the 10th.

The troops, which were on shore two months, had no other provisions but the Queen's. The English being masters of the town and fortifications, I supplied Major Codrington with some boats, and he sent out parties, which brought in some cattle and destroyed several plantations. But provisions fell short, especially bread, and on April 25 I had to put the men on short allowance, that it might if possible last to Jamaica, where I was to sail, by his Royal Highness's orders, on 20 May.

On April 25, at a Council of sea officers, all agreed that we should take 15 days to sail to Jamaica and should stay at some of the Leeward Islands to prepare for doing so.

On 30 April General Codrington, who had been very ill for some time, left "Gardeloupe" and returned in the Maidstone to his Government. He left Colonel Whetham in command, who being also very ill, handed over soon to Colonel Wills, and went to Antegua.

On 3 May, at a Council of sea and land officers, it was decided without dissent to re-embark the men, and this was done on 7 May without loss of a man. The town and fortifications were burnt, and the enemy's guns either burst or taken aboard. The latter were left at the Leewards to supply the ships whose guns had been split ashore at the batteries which were raised there by the seamen I sent ashore. This was a very difficult task, as we had no materials for it.
The mortality on board ship has been very great—in all 760 men, besides the many buried by the transports; but amongst the soldiers the sickness has not been so great.

The soldiers allotted to the Leeward Islands are all ashore, and on the 20th I shall sail for Jamaica, pursuant to his Royal Highness's orders.

By virtue of an order from the Lord High Admiral, you are to sail with your ship and the Kingston and Greenwich (who are to take orders from you), and take under your care all such merchant ships as are ready to go with you to England. Take all imaginable care of their safety. Direct the Kingston to sail at night in rear of the fleet, the Greenwich on either wing to keep the ships from straggling. You shall lead the van with the light and not suffer any of them to go ahead of you by day or by night or to go out of shot of you to windward. Be careful not to over press the merchant ships by carrying too much sail, "they being deep and heavy ships." On all emergencies advise with the captains of her Majesty's ships with you, and make straight for England. Go into Plymouth for orders, if you get none to the contrary, go on to the Downs. Report as often as you can to the Lord High Admiral. See the ships of Bristol safe into Cork or Kinsale, or send one of the warships with them as far as Lundy Island. On arriving in England, give an account at once of all French prisoners in your charge. Words of warranty.

You are to sail with your ship and the York for Virginia, to pick up the ships at Virginia appointed for that convoy. If you are the eldest captain, you are to take from the ships there their orders for your further proceeding; but if not you are not so, you and the York are to take orders from the senior officer.

As a very rich and large fleet of merchantmen is going home hence with the Dunkirk, Kingston and Greenwich, and cannot (it is thought) go through the Windward passage, but must go through the Gulf, you are ordered, for strengthening that convoy, to join it till the ships get through the Gulf.

If then you see nothing that may do them harm, proceed as before and make the best of your way to Virginia. When with the Jamaica convoy, take command as the eldest officer. Words of warranty.

He has now given orders in it, in so far as it relates to his office, and I send it to you inasmuch as some particulars in it require orders to the captains of the convoy and Victuallers of the Navy, who are under his Royal Highness's directions. Lay it before him for the necessary orders in conformity with her Majesty's pleasure in Council.

Extract of a Representation (&c. as above) relating to the defence of Newfoundland, dated 19 March, 1703, and approved by her Majesty in Council on 20 March, 1703.

It is now time to send by convoy supplies for the company of officers and 80 men quartered in Newfoundland. We send the annexed account of what is necessary in clothing and provisions.

In relation to the provisions, they cannot brew in Newfoundland in winter with malt, and can scarcely do it in summer, but brew much more easily with "molasses." They have in previous years been obliged to exchange the malt sent hence for "molasses," so we think that the price of the malt usually sent, and not the malt itself, should go. This would save freight, and avoid accidents of transit. The commodore in command to prevent embezzlement.

PIERRE DUZOULEY TO NOTTINGHAM.

I am very poor and beg to be re-established in my small business. Having had no Gazettes for nearly nine months from the office, I have had to borrow more than 50l. to keep my children. I have always behaved like a good Protestant refugee and acted for the good of the State. I shall await your answer at the foot of your stairs. The Speaker will have told you of other circumstances of my case [details], so need say no more of them.

29 May.  Whitehall.

NOTTINGHAM TO SIR CLOUDESLY SHOVELL.

I send extract of a letter just received, which may be useful to you in the Mediterranean, and a translation. I do not know who wrote it, but he seems to give a good account of the Port of Toulon.

Note of the enclosure [see above, p. 627].

General date, about 30 May.

Petition of Margaret Atcherley, an infant of 18 years only, daughter and heir of Richard Atcherley, deceased, Thomas Harwood and Margaret his wife (late the wife of Richard Atcherley, and mother and guardian of the said Margaret), and Richard Hill, uncle to Margaret Atcherley, shewing that:

A marriage has been arranged by Tho. Harwood, Mrs. Harwood and Hill, between Margaret Atcherley and Robert Lowndes, Esq., son and heir apparent of William Lowndes, Esq. Hill has agreed to give the bride 4,000l. as a marriage portion. This is more than her whole estate is worth; but Hill will give it if he may have all such estate.

Lowndes, in consideration of the said 4,000l., has agreed to make a suitable provision for the said Margaret Atcherley and the children of her said marriage.

Part of Margaret Atcherley's estate consists of lands, tenements, tithes &c. in Weston Lullingfield in Salop, and of a messuage in Shrewsbury. These together are worth 100l. a year and no more. On the marriage of Margaret Atcherley's parents these lands were settled by indentures dated on 6 and 7 June, 1680, to the use of Richard Atcherley for his life, and after his death on his wife for her life for her jointure, and after her death on the heirs of his body lawfully begotten on hers and their issue, and, failing them, to the other heirs of the body of Richard Atcherley, and, failing them, to his right heirs for ever.

Margaret Atcherley, being the only daughter of the marriage, is thereby seized of all the premises in reversion expectant on her mother's life interest, to herself and the heirs of her body, with remainder to herself in fee.

It would be to her advantage to convey the estate for the considerations aforesaid to Hill, but this cannot be done unless she is permitted to suffer a common recovery by warrant under the Privy Seal.

Prays for letters under the Privy Seal to the Lord Chief Justice and other Justices of the Common Pleas to permit her to appear by her guardian in the said Court and suffer the said recovery for the purpose of a conveyance to Hill and his heirs in such a way as may be advised, according to the said agreement.

Order. 28 May, Whitehall. Referred to the Attorney or Solicitor General. Further pleasure.

Recites the facts and submissions of law alleged. The value of the lands in Salop is under 100l. a year. Proceeds:—Privy Seals such as that now prayed have often been granted, and may be so in this case.

This concludes the documents relating to this case.

LORD WEYMOUTH to HEDGES.

A relation of mine, Mrs. Thynne, has a suit in Chancery with one Brett, about a lease let by Mr. Thynne, who was murdered. She has great reason to think it "was made for brokage of the marriage with my Lady Ogle." At the hearing of the cause, Mr. Smith, who is nearly allied to you, will be called. He was then registrar of the Ecclesiastical Court, and examined Major Brett on interrogatories. The favour I would beg of you is to ask Mr. Smith to remember as many circumstances as he can of what happened at the time of Brett's examination.

Command:—Send the [two] Knights of Malta to the Tower to be treated as prisoners of war.

2. To the Prince's Council.

Command:—To order the Navy Board to pay Consul Erle's bills from Lisbon. They are for 49l. 3s. 3d. for piloting her Majesty's ships in and out of Lisbon. The Queen approves of five ships being joined to Sir Cloudesly Shovell's squadron. Give orders for them to be ready to proceed with Sir Cloudesly if ordered.
